There were a number of minor missteps at Café St. Petersburg. The mediocre bread, which on one evening arrived refrigerator-cold, surprised us—especially since the Boston area boasts a first-rate Serbian-American baker, Igor (of Iggy's fame), which I thought a Russian restaurant would choose to patronize out of ethnic solidarity. Second, the aforementioned pathetic garnish of iceberg leaves and plastic-like hothouse tomatoes appeared on more than one plate. Finally, the host or greeter, indulging his cigarette smoking habit just outside the front door of the restaurant and creating a hazy cloud through which patrons had to pass on entering, didn't make the most positive of first impressions.

Still, it was hard not to enjoy the quaint, Old World atmosphere; the honest, wholesome and (for the most part) well-rendered food; the earnest, friendly servers with charming Russian accents; the reasonable prices and good value; and the soothing melodies of the engaging pianist. iB en Tables' new chef… ood dinner, bad date…

CAROLYN FAYE FOX

David Punch is pleased as you-know-what. As of May 1, he's assumed his first head chef posi-, at Ten Tables in Jamaica Plain. It's ig step for the former UpStairs on Square sous chef, but not a drastic : Punch worked at UpStairs with fs Amanda Lydon and Susan Regis, h of whom have helped out in the hen at Ten Tables. And even though been cooking full-time at Ren-zvous in Central Square since f/owner Steve Johnson opened his place last fall, Punch took on re-nsibility for Ten Tables' Tuesday night e dinners several weeks ago, learning ropes from Lydon, who served as Ten les' chef for the past six months.

I'd gone in and cooked with Amanda night," he says, and immediately felt at he. Although he'll start changing the nu right away (Punch promises "hanger ık with green garlic butter, duck -fried potatoes—yum!—and a wild wa-ress salad, maybe with Meyer lemon aigrette, to catch the end of the sea-"), the bill of fare will remain true to ner Krista Kranyak's concept of afford-, accessible French country cuisine.

'unch won't miss a beat, says Kranyak, takes pride in Ten Tables' reputation—h among diners for consistency and in industry as a great place to work.

It's an honor to have them in my hen," says Kranyak of the big names are drawn to her tiny restaurant. "It's n place to work," she says. Punch is not ll averse to special requests or menu stitutions—which adds up to a relaxed erience for the diner. And the restau-t will never add up to more than 10 ta-, says Kranyak.

I've gotten offers" to enlarge the space, says, "but this is what separates me n the rest of Boston… I've got a little thing here."

OMEBACK FOR CROMA

nere fire can't burn out a restaurant t makes its pizza in 750-degree ovens! the end of May, Croma will re-open Newbury Street after undergoing ex-sive renovations following a fiery hap in January. Look for new plasma een TVs, an outdoor patio that's been arged by a third, and new dishes on the nu: seasonal fruit and cheese plate, ta selections, and filet mignon with goat cheese. Coming soon: Saturday and Sunday brunch.

Chef David Punch takes over the kitchen at Ten Tables in Jamaica Plain

DINNER: 2, DATE: 0

It was a blind date designed to be seen: Gourmet Date, a show on locally available cable television taped by XY.tv, brought together a good-looking, nicely dressed couple for a getting-to-know-you dinner at Ashmont Grill in Dorchester. Both guy and gal cleaned their plates, but the personal interaction apparently didn't instill a craving for more. As the blonde left Ashmont, she was overheard saying, "This place is really great. I'll come back with someone I like."

FOOD & WINE & NO TAXES

Here's a first for New Hampshire: Food & Wine magazine has named a chef from the granite state to its prestigious list of America's Best New Chefs. Congratulations to Mary Dumont, executive chef at the Dunaway Restaurant at Strawbery Banke in Portsmouth—and a Portsmouth-area native, no less. Open since last September, the Dunaway features contemporary American fare created from the best offerings of local purveyors and extensive working kitchen gardens, including original Concord grapes. WINE

By Any Other Name

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

May in New England means it's rosé time. There's something about the combination of festive bright color, fruity red wine flavor and chilled serving temperature that makes this a natural warm weather choice. You can enjoy a cool-to-the-touch rosé when the sun's shining too brightly to crack open almost any red wine, and the best part is you don't have to worry about the vintage (youngest is best), the glassware (any stem at all) or the price tag (moderate). Although rosé has wrongly been confused with white zinfandel, this much maligned, poorly understood style of wine is beginning to have its rightful day in the sun. Why? Because enough people are drinking rosés with food and realizing not only that they're refreshing, but also that they taste good.

You'll actually find as much variation among rosés as among white and red wines. Some are light and delicate, others crisp, still others full and spicy. There's also quite a range of color variation, from pale coppery orange to deep bluish pink. The biggest misconception: that most rosé is very sweet. In fact, most are much more dry. Spain, France, Portugal and Italy each have a tradition of producing delicious dry rosés. As with other wines, quality ultimately has everything to do with the grapes that are used. Lively grapes with concentrated flavor produce rosé that will convert all but the most determined snob into a believer. Among the finest varieties used in the rosé production process, pinot noir, grenache and cabernet franc stand at the top of my list. Among the essential ingredients in a rosé are moderate alcohol and sufficient acidity to refresh the palate.

The following wines represent the winning entries in the most recent blind tasting of rosés I conduct every year. At the top of the list among the criteria for selection is adaptability with food. They're listed in ascending order of preference.

Domaine de Saint-Antoine, Vin de Pays du Gard, Rhône, France, 2005 ($10)
This estate-bottled wine shows an attractive medium-red color with flashes of pink and purple. Its aromas are somewhat subdued, with appetizing green herb and earthy notes. Bone-dry, strikingly crisp and spicy, the flavors are beautifully balanced if a bit subdued. This is a serious rosé, ideal for Mediterranean fare. It's not, however, what you'd describe as very fruity. The cherry flavors are fresh, herb-accented and lingering.

Torres De Casta, Catalunya DO, Spain, 2004 ($9)
It turns out that the venerable producer of some of northeastern Spain's greatest red wines also makes a delicious rosé with deep flavors and stylish, smooth textures. A bit bold in color for a rosé, perhaps reflecting the inclusion of the deeply pigmented carinena grape along with the more common garnacha, this wine was also among the fullest-bodied in the tasting. Florally scented, dry and minerally, this is a great choice for grilled shrimp or chicken rubbed in herbs. It's bottled with a screw cap, so you can take it on a picnic and leave the corkscrew home.

Bodegas Valdemar Essencia, Rioja DOC, Spain, 2005 ($9)
Another Spanish entry, from the storied region of Rioja (where pink wines are not the priority), this wine has a pale, lightish salmon color and a heady perfume of wildflowers and strawberries. Pure garnacha in composition, it's soft, dry and clean, with a silky texture. Despite low levels of acidity, this Rioja rosé is very well-balanced because the fruit is so juicy and flavorful. I would recommend this with everything from gazpacho, or other cold soups, to grilled sausage with onions and peppers.

Artazuri, Navarra DO, Spain, 2004 ($10)
The highly regarded Artazuri estate, located in a hilly region near Rioja, specializes in concentrated garnacha-based reds and this rosé, which is made from the younger grapes on the property. Orange in color, with some bright, deep-red tones, it shows a charmingly smoky, strawberry aroma, with earthy, crisp, fresh, spicy fruit. Salty tapas dishes are an obvious choice, but I also found it irresistible with a sizzling hamburger. It's the kind of wine you can easily enjoy while watching a Red Sox afternoon game. At home, of course.

Domaine Houchart, Côtes de Provence AOC, France, 2005 ($9)
A near unanimous choice by my tasting panel, this delicately colored French wine showed an intriguing aroma of melon and tangerine to go along with its smooth texture and soft, herby red-fruit tones. Another estate-bottled rosé, the Domaine is one of the most esteemed in the highly fashionable region of Provence, whic contributes some of the world's most substantially flavored rosés. The ripe, plush, red-berry fruit shows a bit of a citric edge, making this wine one of the most adaptable. It' great as a refreshing aperitif, yet can work beautifully with a simple preparation of fish an vegetables. IB

The Gentlemen

SAT./MAY 13

Music: Distinguished Gentlemen

Although the word "rock star" might not prompt the word "gentlemen" in a high-stakes game of word association, that doesn't mean there aren't some gentlemen out there who can rock. See for yourself on May 13, as Boston-based rockers the Gentlemen headline a show at the Middle East in Cambridge. The group, made up of local musicians Mike Gent (singer/guitarist), Lucky Jackson (guitarist/vocalist), Ed Valauskas (bassist/vocalist) and Pete Caldes (drummer), got together in the spring of '99 and only a year later released their debut album Ladies and Gentlemen... the Gentlemen on Boston's Hearbox/Q Division Records. The album earned them critical acclaim and put the Gentlemen on the national music radar. Since then, the guys have won the WBCN Rock 'n' Roll Rumble in 2002 and released two more albums: 2003's Blondes Prefer the Gentlemen and Brass City Band, which dropped in February of last year. They've also become fixtures at Theo Epstein's annual Hot Stove, Cool Music. To put it politely, these gentlemen kick ass. The Middle East Club, 472 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-931-2000). www.mideastclub.com. 8 pm. $10. —R.L.

Music: A Class Act

Since releasing his first album in 1977, Elvis Costello has genre-hopped all the way from punk to country-western to new wave to pop. And he's continued to push the envelope in recent years, releasing a full-length orchestral CD in 2004 based on A Midsummer Night's Dream called Il Sogno (The Dream). You can hear Costello perform it live alongside Keith Lockhart and his crew to kick off the 2006 Boston Pops season. Originally commissioned by the Italian dance company Aterbaletto for their balletic interpretation of Shakespeare's comedy, the 80-minute piece incorporates a mixture of jazz, folk and classical music, with no intermission. The ballet's been staged throughout Europe, and the U.S. premiere was part of the 2004 Lincoln Center Festival in New York. A recording of Costello's piece with the London Symphony Orchestra topped the contemporary classical music charts for 14 weeks. Next up for Costello is an opera based on the life of Hans Christian Andersen, commissioned by the Royal Danish Opera and scheduled to debut in 2007. Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-266-1200). 6 pm. $55 and up. —L.P.K.

CityScope: Five Alive

For a city nearly 2,000 miles from the Mexican border, we sure know how to celebrate Cinco de Mayo. This May 5, you'll find parties commemorating Mexico's manhandling of the French back in 1862 all over the city. José McIntyre's on Milk Street opens its doors at lunchtime, but the party really gets started at 5 pm, when 100.7 WZLX hosts a live broadcast until 7 pm. After a short break, WAAF brings their broadcast signal over to José Mac's and will be on the air live from 11 pm–2 am. Over in Charlestown, Tavern on the Water gets cooking at 11:30 am with Mexican food and a make-your-own-margarita bar, as well as music from a live mariachi band. WBCN's Mark Hamilton broadcasts live from Dick's Last Resort from 7-11 pm at a party that also features a chance to win $500 by playing "Find the Limes in the Sandbox." If the bar scene isn't your style and you're looking for a more traditional celebration, head over to Olé Mexican Grill in Inman Square. Olé offers an all-you-can-eat Mexican menu for $25, to go with some live music from 5 pm–12 am. And lastly, if your calendar's already full on the fifth, Zocalo in Brighton celebrates the holiday all weekend with a menu of 11 new sangrias that can be ordered by the glass ($5), half pitcher ($9) or pitcher ($18). —R.L.

Performing Arts: Dazzlin' Divas

Ryan Landry, playwright and founder of the infamous drag troupe the Gold Dust Orphans, claims his new musical Cleopatra is destined to be the most lavish show in Boston this spring. (If he's wrong, he says he'll eat his negligee.) The performance, which features original music ranging from soul and funk to R&B and vaudeville-inspired tunes, shows at the Machine Theater in the Fenway district on Fridays and Saturdays for the month of May. The show features more than 100 costume changes and what Landry describes as "sumptuous" production numbers inspired by the original film with the diva herself—Elizabeth Taylor. Local drag queen Afrodite stars as Cleopatra. *Machine Theater, 1254 Boylston St., Boston (617-265-6222). www.golddustorphans.com. Through May 27. Carmen To Get Ya

Carmen plays at the Wang Center, May 11-21.

Arguably the most famous opera of all time, Carmen is being reimagined by Boston Ballet's resident choreographer, Jorma Elo, as the internationally recognized ballet company brings its 42nd season to a close.

Why Carmen? Elo explains: "I decided that my first 'story' ballet should be something that has a record of being transformed into a ballet. I've always liked the music, so Carmen seemed to be the perfect vehicle." And with dozens of filmed versions dating back to 1907 (who can forget VH1's Carmen: A Hip-Hopera?), audiences have found a timeless appeal in the story of love, jealousy and betrayal.

Elo's update is set in the contemporary world of the rich and famous: The main characters have been transformed from a 19th-century factory worker, soldier and bullfighter into a 21st-century supermodel, businessman and Formula One driver. The dancing is set to the familiar Carmen Suite by Rodion Shchedrin, and the production features costumes by Joke Visser, sets by Walt Spangler and lighting by Mikki Kunttu.

At a recent rehearsal, Elo worked with three couples each playing Carmen and Don José in three separate performances. The dancers emulated Elo's movements as he listened to the music and demonstrated his ideas; but each couple brought something different to the experiment as they followed Elo's direction. "It's a partnership. Dancers bring their own interpretation to the movement, inspiring the choreography to take on a different meaning," Elo says.

Elo tells the story using sharp, angular movements combined with familiar ballet technique. Although the communication is wordless, Elo's choreography is sexual and passionate, and it speaks loudly of universal themes.

Carmen and George Balanchine's* Serenade *run at the Wang Center for the Performing Arts, May 11–21. 270 Tremont St., Boston (800-447-7400). www.telecharge.com. $18–$105.

Dukes is a disgraced upstate–New York rball legend who, a decade after he shamed himby cheating during a match, is back for physical moral redemption. The plot is fairly by-the-bers (Dukes gathers a ragtag team for a tournat), yet it manages to keep its comic momentum nks to some daffy characters, including a belrent ex-Marine (Rob Riggle), Duke's arrogant esis (Rob Huebel) and the Canadian-hating nament director (Boston comic D.J. So does Joseph Gordon-Levitt's appealing perance as a mopey yet industrious teen trying to out what happened to Emily (Emilie de Ravin), trung-out ex-girlfriend who started hanging out the school's manipulative, power-wielding rich popular kids. Neither Levitt's performance nor son's script stoops to obvious levels to make the likable. American Idle Satire sticks to the shallow end.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

If there's going to be another stinging satire in theaters this season chronicling the unholy alliance of business, entertainment, politics and the media besides Thank You for Smoking—well, American Dreamz won't be it.

Writer-director Paul Weitz—who made American Pie and About a Boy with brother Chris, and In Good Company on his own—seemed ready to step up in class to a comedy with a little more bite. But he can't pull it off. The most surprising thing about American Dreamz isn't that it's only intermittently funny, but that Weitz has nothing interesting to say.

That's especially unexpected considering the topical elements American Dreamz tries to pull together—specifically, the intersection of an American Idol–style show that gives the movie its title and a micro-managed, dim-witted president with a Texas accent. In trying to skewer American Idol and George W. Bush, Weitz has limited himself to certain "realities." So American Dreamz may take a little creative license—the only on-air personality in the movie's talent-hunt show is Hugh Grant's Simon Cowell–like Martin Tweed, while Dennis Quaid's Bush-esque prez is named Staton—but the movie gives you the impression that American Idol and Bush are beyond parody. Or at least beyond Weitz's parodying abilities.

Self-loathing, shrewd Tweed is one of the movie's more interesting characters, but it's not as if he's an especially perceptive swipe at Simon Cowell. I haven't seen American Idol for more than a few minutes at a time, yet even I could have pegged those traits on Cowell. Like a wrestling bad guy, he's taken a part of his personality and built it into a marketable persona. He's pretty transparent.

Tweed knows where his bread is buttered, and instructs his staff to get him "freaks" for the show's upcoming season. Among the contestants they choose are small-town girl Sally (Mandy Moore), to whom Tweed immediately warms when he realizes she's as driven and cunning as he is, and Omer (Sam Golzari), a recent Iraqi immigrant who becomes that season's so-goofy-he's-entertaining William Hung fan favorite.

Sally and Omer inject most of the comedy into the TV-show side of the movie. There's less fictional wiggle room in the side involving President Staton, and the gags are so one-note and obvious that they're rarely funny. After winning re-election, on a whim Staton decides to read a newspaper and, discovering the world's issues are full of many more grey areas than his chief of staff (Willem Dafoe) and other handlers would ever let him know, he goes into a funk.

Couldn't Weitz come up with anything more interesting than having his Bush character be dumb and manipulated by his staff? The real Bush is a freakier dummy than Staton, as most any episode of The Daily Show will reveal. Oddly, Weitz can't even amusingly dovetail the White House and TV sides of his story. After Staton stays holed up in the White House for three weeks, the chief of staff cuts a deal for him to be a guest judge on the finals of American Dreamz, since it's the highest-rated show and he wants to get the president in front of the public again.

Jeez. Couldn't Weitz have made the president a fan of the show who neglects affairs of state because he's so obsessed with the singing competition, and who then begs to get on the show? That might have been more interesting than the predictable dumbness jokes. Or American Dreamz could have taken a cue from the hilarious Saturday Night Live sketch that presented Ronald Reagan not as a doddering old fart, but as a sharp operator masterminding forbidden arms sales to Nicaragua and beyond.

Because it goes for the obvious, American Dreamz is politically toothless. In fact, the movie's poster mentions the war in Iraq (or any other real issue) more than the actual movie does.

But it's pretty obvious from the beginning that the comedy in American Dreamz is going to be very broad and mostly empty.

Sally Kendoo (Mandy Moore) is a contestant on the talent show hosted by Martin Tweed (Hugh Grant) in American Dreamz.

There's no real dramatic foundation to actually enhance the comedy (check out 1975's Smile for a competition movie that cuts deeper). In Thank You for Smoking, you at least feel that the hero believes his own hogwash. Here, that's not the case. Tweed knows everything is show, Sally knows every touchy-feely human-interest story she can concoct from her life helps her chances of victory, and the president, after he gets on a diet of "happy pills," just "stays on message."

American Dreamz gets better in its last half hour, giving the impression that Weitz came up with his climax first and then backtracked in writing the script. But the dots don't always connect on the way to that climax, and they don't yield many laughs. iB

American Dreamz ★★

Written and directed by Paul Weitz. With Hugh Grant, Dennis Quaid, Mandy Moore, Sam Golzari, Willem Dafoe, Chris Klein, Jennifer Coolidge and Marcia Gay Harden. Rated PG-13. At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.

another level, though, the comedy is about entering middle age and dealing with diminished expectations and the person you're trying to spend the rest of your life with. Nothing groundbreaking occurs, but everything here is appealing: the smart script, the experienced cast sharing the load, the unpretentious approach and the effective comedy about everyday life. (At Kendall Square.)

The Inside Man ★★★

Spike Lee's thriller has problems but, after the embarrassing She Hate Me, his latest is generally a return to form. The movie's strengths and weaknesses come from first-time screenwriter Russell Gewirtz's script. Gewirtz comes up with a nifty premise (a bank heist in which the mastermind, played by Clive Owen, is after something besides the stacked-up money in the vault), though some of its elements—including the personal problems of the NYPD negotiator (Denzel Washington) and the influence of a hatchet woman to the rich and famous (Jodie Foster) on the case—are woefully underdeveloped. Lee's use of Terence Blanchard's suave music sometimes seems out of place next to the more forceful action of the robbery, but his straightforward direction keeps the tale from bogging down. The only real oddity here is how the Gotham local color (New Yawk accents, Gentiles using Yiddish, belligerent attitude, etc.) is pushed so hard that it verges on self-parody. Lee usually has been able to capture his hometown much more naturally. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Lonesome Jim ★★★

Steve Buscemi's latest as a director is a dour, endearing comedy about a morose 27-year-old (Casey Affleck) returning to his Indiana parents' home to, as he tells one friend, "have a nervous breakdown." There, he finds a mom (Mary Kay Place) who's full of industry and denial, an ineffectual dad (Seymour Cassell), an older brother (Kevin Corrigan) who's even worse off than he is and a sweet nurse (Liv Tyler) who asks little from life. The grim, rural setting can be depressing early on (we feel our hero's pain) but, like him, the movie finds healing power there. Yes, Casey Affleck's Liv Tyler movie handily outdoes brother Ben's two movies with her. (At Kendall Square.)

Lucky Number Slevin ★★

It's been a while since a comic/violent thriller tried so hard and failed so blatantly. Director Paul McGuigan's movie might as well be from th 1990s, when an abundance of Tarantino-wa movies like Things to Do in Denver When Dead strained to be hip, tried to pass off sm as invention and let loose many a "clever" In this one, Josh Hartnett plays Slevin, the guy in the wrong place," as he says, wh caught between two feuding NYC crime (Morgan Freeman and Ben Kingsley, seein can overact more egregiously). Lucy Liu here as a kooky coroner (she and Hartnett pleasing romantic chemistry), and so are Willis as an enigmatic hit man and Stanley as a not-very-perceptive detective. From th the production-design-run-amok (like a flashback in which more than half the ca parking lot are muscle cars) are clues that rector is not in control of what's going on, least making some very poor choices. By th the big plot twist kicks in 75 minutes late just want the thing to end. (At Boston Co Fenway and suburbs.)

The Notorious Bettie Page ★★

The shapely Page—whose cheesecake, bo and nude photos made her both great eye and a freedom fighter in the sexual revolu might be the least interesting person in he movie. Although Gretchen Mol has the ri tributes to fill Page's leopard-skin bikini and very good job at simulating the rambunctiou fulness Page brought to her photos, Mary H movie might've done its subject the ultima sult. She's interesting only when her clothes off. The movie it resembles most is Ed Woo about someone who worked on the fringes o mainstream entertainment and was an u candidate to become an icon decades later. Wood had a hook for its hero. It presented an eager, optimistic dreamer. You felt his pe ity. Harron and co-writer Guinevere Turne no such handle on Page. She doesn't seem strong feelings about anything. It's understa not to present Page as just an exploited skin or just a liberated exhibitionist. In reality, sh bit of both. But the movie cries out for Betti presented as something. The movie might have been en- le enough if it had been just about Nick, but its larger snapshot of the nation is where it gains strength. Reitman, adapting Christopher Buckley's novel, builds the comedy into a Wag the Dog–style spoof of how much we've become a culture of spin, half-truths and forces seeking to distract us from life's realities. Serious Chops Umphrey's McGee develops a language and an appeal beyond standard jams.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Because of its grassroots touring style and friendships, Umphrey's McGee may deserve the jam-band reputation that makes the Chicago sextet the latest potential heir to the Phish throne.

Yet The New York Times emphasized the group's prog-rock tendencies in a review of Umphrey's new CD, Safety in Numbers (and it's even more prevalent in the group's previous album Anchor Drops). Some members are schooled in jazz and classical music, and the band plays unexpected rock covers like Toto's "Africa" and Van Halen's "Hot for Teacher." When Umphrey's does jam, it does so deceptively, with a cool proficiency and discipline that's more Steely Dan than Grateful Dead.

The diverse musical backgrounds of Umphrey's McGee bring an eclectic sound to the stage.

"The idea is to make it sound seamless and premeditated," guitarist-singer Jake Cinninger says. "It's very much close listening for us, and how quickly we can jump on each other's ideas. I could see how people listening think, 'Is this a song, or are these guys jamming, or what?'"

Much of the group's eclectic style and form stems from Cinninger, who cut his teeth on speedy metal-guitar idols Eddie Van Halen and Yngwie Malmsteen as well as prog-rock pioneers Yes and Frank Zappa. "The new musician of today can pull from all sorts of areas," says Cinninger, who also formally studied classical guitar for a decade and worked as an arranger for a country trio. He was barely into his teens when he began playing roadhouses around Michigan.

"I've been playing professionally since then, so I've got quite a few years," says the 29-year-old guitarist. "It's a second-nature thing, and to be with a group of fellows like Umphrey's is a perfect situation to fulfill all the musical ideas that you'd want to fulfill—in one band."

Singer-guitarist Brendan Bayliss, bassist Ryan Stasik and keyboardist Joel Cummins were Notre Dame students when they launched the band in 1998. "They just happened to be gifted musicians and going to school there," says Cinninger, who joined two years later after the dissolution of his rival area trio, Ali Baba's Tahini. "They hooked up and the rest is history. It's funny how modestly it started, and how far along we are now."

The group is currently on a tour that includes a May 6 date at Avalon, a May 18 slot on Jimmy Kimmel Live (with Huey Lewis reprising his cameo on the new CD's Little Feat–like "Women, Wine and Song"), a return to the Bonnaroo stage, and dates with the Dave Matthews Band and scene buddies moe.

Named after a Bayliss relative, Umphrey's McGee kicked into gear in 2000 after the band moved to Chicago and Cinninger brought his ax and tunes to the fold, which is rounded out by percussionist Andy Farag and Berklee-trained drummer Kris Myers.

"A lot of the guys were influenced by Phish," Cinninger says from a San Diego tour stop. "But the sound has changed completely through the years. I guess that's a bit of the reason why they wanted me in the band, 'cause I didn't have any jam-band influences. I was more of an old-school guy."

That included a rigorous work ethic. "I thought we should develop our own language, so when we're improvising, we're all on the same page and not hoping for some ESP thought process to get us through the night," he says. "So we took this jamming idea and made it into an actual sign language, like baseball cues. Anybody can call out one of these 30 or 40 cues and make movements in an improvisational setting. That was our little breakthrough."

If cue-shaped precision sounds a bit too mathematical for the average audience, Cinninger adds, "Then you take all that and put it to a funk beat, and you've got something the girls can shake their ass to. Also, onstage we like to have a good time and play jokes and play funky covers."

Among those jokes is "Miss Tinkle's Overture," a grand, Genesis-style instrumental inspired by Cummins. "He had to take a leak in the van a while back, and there was an empty Gatorade bottle," Cinninger says. "He thought he'd take a shot at it, and he missed the bottle and hit our pillows. Thenceforth, he was called 'Miss Tinkle.'"

Umphrey's is more likely to connect with mainstream fans through the thoughtful, mortality-themed songs of Safety in Numbers. The disc was influenced by emotional travails that Bayliss and his bandmates were going through, particularly a friend's death at the hands of a drunk driver on New Year's Eve.

"It was the seriousness we were all feeling," Cinninger says. "We could either just deny the fact that we've been through a lot together in a short amount of time or write about it, and make a serious record within a jam-band atmosphere, which hasn't been done a lot." IB

By working with a BAC trainer I have gained more knowledge about training, nutrition and motivation than I ever thought I would. I feel confident that I can work out on my own and get an effective workout."

I never thought it could happen to me.

As a lifelong bicyclist, I have participated in many bicycling events for worthwhile causes. I even got to ride with Lance Armstrong, Eric Heiden, and Greg LeMond.

Then on my 45th birthday, I got the news,"You have multiple sclerosis."

Like many people newly diagnosed, I did not know what to do or what to think. So I contacted the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. I got the information and care resources I needed.

I learned that the Society shares my passion for bicycling. Last year, I formed a team and rode the Great Mass Getaway MS 150 Bike Tour. Together we raised over $12,000 to help support other people like me and their families.

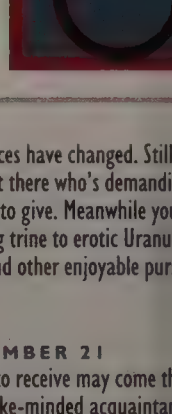
MAY 3–16, 2006

BY ROCKIE GARDI



TAURUS APRIL 20–MAY 20

It needn't turn into a contest, but while the sun in your sign confronts generous Jupiter, there's no telling how much of yourself you'll be willing to give to your partner, and vice versa. Let's hope a kidney is not an issue. And don't be surprised if altruistic friends offer to participate, since they're under Jupiter's beneficent influence as well. While it might not change the course of history, the supportive trine between optimistic Jupiter and progressive Uranus should have a liberating effect on you and your closest companions. Where's the party?

GEMINI

MAY 21–JUNE 20

Echoes of Thanksgiving! No, not a repeat of the meal, but something similar to what happened the first time that innovative Uranus in your career midheaven received Jupiter's blessing. Their second trine occurs this week. So, whether you deserve it or not, you're due for another bonanza. Maybe it simply will be recognition of your creativity. But since Jupiter also bestows bucks, it's safe to assume that more of those are on their way. Say around the 7th, about the time both planets trine energetic Mars in your money house.

CANCER

JUNE 21–JULY 22

In case you hadn't noticed, 2006 is shaping up to be a good year to be an emotional, empathetic water sign. And this is the week to be grateful that, by underscoring your innate talents and traits, assertive Mars in Cancer is ensuring that you benefit from the alliance between altruistic Uranus in Pisces and benevolent Jupiter in Scorpio. A grand water trine among three such positive forces for progress is a wonder to behold. For some Crabs, it means an exciting new adventure; for others, invaluable insights into family history.

LEO

JULY 23–AUGUST 22

Taurus is the time of year when your reputation can get either polished or tarnished. It depends on which avenue you decide to pursue when your sun ruler confronts expensive Jupiter in your home base and, at the same time, tests your partner's faith in a working relationship along with your ability to be both patient and constructive. This particularly trying dilemma is known as a Grand Cross, a configuration you won't have to deal with again for years to come. However, what you do now can have a significant impact around your birthday.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

A clever but somewhat unpredictable partner may be attracting most of the attention, but it's your resources, intellectual and financial, plus your willingness to invest them that'll advance both your careers. So step back from the spotlight, bide your time and see what happens as your joint project gains momentum. Before you have to call home for Mother's Day, you may be offered, if not a traditional payoff, then an opportunity to be part of something that is truly significant. Once your Mercury ruler leaves Aries for Taurus, your approach should become less strident.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23–OCTOBER 22

With so much going on—some of it relevant to society as a whole, some of it applicable to your circle of friends—don't neglect the important fact that your Venus ruler is currently in Aries, the sign of your cosmic complement. If all you want at the moment is to concentrate on having a more meaningful one-on-one relationship, so be it. Over the next two weeks, money and goods will come and go according to the vagaries of complicated planetary configurations. Some tasks will be a snap, but most will be frustrating or difficult.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23–NOVEMBER 21

Put up or shut up! Sound familiar? This week, as generous Jupiter in your sign is confronted by the sun in your Taurus house of allies, you're liable to hear this challenge again. It's been 12 years since Jupiter was in Scorpio, so it's reasonable to assume that your circumstances have changed. Still there's liable to be a partner out there who's demandi more of you than you're willing to give. Meanwhile yo coruler is perfecting a rewarding trine to erotic Uranu your Pisces house of romance and other enjoyable pur

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22–DECEMBER 21

The good fortune you're about to receive may come th an organization or a group of like-minded acquaintar and perhaps via your guardian angel as well. Because Jupiter ruler is part of the beneficial Grand Trine aspe effect this week, consider yourself wrapped in the pro arms of your sponsor, partner and family members (r even the crazy landlady, too). You'll probably be aske offer more support in return, but since your sense of imminent disaster seems to have disappeared for the moment, reciprocating shouldn't be a problem.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

After Venus pulls out of the emotional Piscean abyss ar enters spirited Aries on the third, relations with neighb siblings and Web pals should brighten considerably. Ar the goddess favors your Saturn ruler the weekend of th seventh, they may even live up to your high standards. get to mesh their abilities with their aesthetic sense. Lo find stability where there were doubts. Satisfied shopp acquire what they didn't know they longed for. Despite family member's complaint, it's a win-win situation fo

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

This week you might feel conflicted between what you to accomplish at work and a promise you made to the family. No matter how the opposition between growth oriented Jupiter in your career zone and the productiv Taurus sun plays out, the resolution can be more expe than you anticipated. But not to worry. Since your Ur ruler is favored by protective and prosperous Jupiter, personally and career-wise, you should make out oka However, you'll probably have to convince your partn be patient for a while longer.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Keep focused on your own future and you'll be able to navigate the winds of change the rest of society is bei buffeted by. Because erratic Uranus in your sign is do blessed by both Jupiter in Scorpio and Mars in Cancer ornery independent streak of yours could be your mo valuable asset: not forever, but for this week. If there new product or process you've been thinking about, n would be a good time to bring it forth. Jupiter can pr access to investment money. Mars provides the motiv and energy to take your project to completion.

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

While not as spectacular a feat as winning the lottery could get a shot at earning a painless paycheck. It m be the reward you hoped for, but the sextile from the sun in your money house to your Mars ruler still supp your personal agenda which, we assume, includes a significant amount of financial gain. Attractive, affec Venus, by entering your sign on the third for the next weeks, makes it even harder for folks to not give you you want. Figure that advantage into your agenda.

IMMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Have a Nice Guilt Trip

To the couple in the silver Audi in the South End: I felt terrible that I bumped the car behind me getting out of my spot on a beautiful April morning. Thank you so much for driving up next to me, rolling down your window and yelling at me for my poor parallel parking skills. I guess I was distracted when leaving my parking spot on the way to my mother's funeral. Apparently you were too busy noticing my poor driving to see the black suit, sunglasses, and sad expression on my face. Next time you feel like helping the public, maybe you could give some change to the homeless, or volunteer, instead of making a terrible day worse by yelling at someone who rubbed against a bumper.

I don't know—just think of something that will cool my jets while I'm waiting for my food. In other words, give me something to think about other than where my freaking meal is. Also, I'll typically tip 20 to 25 percent; I can afford to. But if I don't like the service for any reason, I have the right to give you a buck and some pennies to let you know you need a new job.

—Just Trying to Help

Smoke-Free Plea

To the smoker at the Park Street Red Line stop in the mornings: Why do you have to smoke inside the T station? How sad it is to be so chained to your addiction that you can't wait a few minutes to smoke outside. And going all the way to the end of the platform doesn't hide the fact that you're smoking inside; the stench blows all the way down the T stop. We shouldn't have to smell your nauseating cigarettes in the morning. Why are you so special and above the rules?

—All Choked Up

You Are My Sunshine

To the "Italiana" with big brown hair and a loud mouth: You try to hide your large Cuban friend behind you, but it's a lost cause. You need new pants (preferably with all the belt loops intact). You aim your copy of the IMPROPER at would-be suitors on the number 39 bus with each new issue. I'm a rambunctious, 20-something, mocha-skinned man who's known you for half a decade and enjoys every minute of your "Elaine" dance moves. I've lived beneath you, worked next to you, and will finally graduate with you. Here's to five years well spent. I hope you can stop whining about this to me now. You know I love you and wish you the best.

—One Big Admirer

Prima Donna Mama

To that crazy mom (and you know who you are): It's open casting call, and you're late for your appointment. We've all been waiting patiently in a crammed little hallway. But you felt the need to storm up to the poor, overworked secretary and tell him—harshly—your excuse for being late. Apparently, your daughter just got back from some competition an hour away; you ranted on and on about how she deserves to get in. Of course, the guy doesn't want some psychotic, overbearing woman on his back the whole time, so he gives in and puts you at the front of the line for the next audition. You cut everyone else who so patiently waited their turn, and who actually weren't late! Next time, don't be tardy. And if you are, at least wait until people get a chance to audition! Don't be such a snooty, stuffy, psychotic bitch about it! (By the way, your daughter didn't do so well.)

—No Sympathy for the Devil

Tickets for Two

To the interesting world traveler on the E Line: You and I struck up a conversation at Copley Station while waiting for a train, then we chatted on the train until we got to your stop. You're from Texas and work for Air Canada. I have brown hair and hazel eyes and also like to travel. I enjoyed talking to you and would be interested in getting to know you better. E-mail me if you're interested!

LOOK WHO CAME TO DINNER...

Think it's a bitch planning a dinner party for six? Well, try upwards of 600, which is what Community Servings does, and in a style that would make Martha Stewart green with envy, to boot.

The annual Life Savor benefit began with a cocktail reception at the Langham Hotel where one could spot such bold-faced names as B-52's frontman Fred Schneider, snappy, cracklin' Pops conductor Keith Lockhart (with the lovely Emily Zalesky), smokingly hot Channel 7 anchor Frances Rivera, Hizzonah Tom Menino, latter-day Dashiell Hammett Robert B. Parker, Herald gossipeuses Laura Raposa and Gayle Fee. Seen mingling amongst them: restaurateurs Gary Sullivan and Michela Larson of Rialto and Blu, stunning interior designer Eileen Patterson, eternal club kid Tommy Yazbek, Langham head honcho Serge Denis and the gorgeous Jane, newlyweds Andrew and Olga Rogal, Persian stunner Ghazal Mozafarian with financial wunderkind Paul Karger, hedge fund titan John McGillian, redheaded siren Sharon Conway, and inadvertent twins Sam Mazzarelli and Enrique Ramos-Smilgus, who proved that gay men aren't half as hissy as they're portrayed to be by laughing when they saw that they were wearing the exact same outfit. (As someone pointed out, "If it was two women, there'd be blood on the floor").

After imbibing a few martinis, bidding in the silent auction and sampling some delicious nibblies, everyone dispersed to 85 of the city's top restaurants for intimate dinner parties, which were followed by coffee and the sinfully delicious yet wicked-for-the-waistline chocolate bar at the after party.

Summing up the evening, one guest said, "You gotta love any fundraiser that makes you seriously consider becoming bulimic."

CONSULT YOUR PHYSICIAN BEFORE SEEING THIS OR ANY OPERA...

If your idea of a good time is watching a boozy old showgirl slowly expire from tuberculosis, you'd have loved Opening Night of the Boston Lyric Opera's production of La Traviata.

The evening began with cocktails and dinner at the Four Seasons, where the rarefied guestlist included such opera lovers as stalwart supporter Linda Cabot Black, über arts-patrons Hod and Cassandra Irvine, the delightful Mary and Sherif Nada with Fidelity head Ned Johnson and the lovely Lily, hotel and real estate titan Roger Saunders and his gorgeous wife, Norma, new BLO board chair Steve Akin, his opera-singer wife, Jane, and their stunning daughter, Kyla, and gubernatorial hopeful Deval Patrick, who said, only half-joking, that his love for opera "goes back to my childhood... more specifically, to Bugs Bunny cartoons."

Spotted among the audience at the Shubert: famed sculptor Nancy Schon, Wellesley horticulturalist Heidi Kost-Gross, proper Bostonian Jeffrey Marshall, the swanlike Maria Stata, the insanely chic Melanie Gendrey and Mbiti Jean-Pierre, and Cokie and Lee Perry, among others.

Following the performance, coffee and dessert were served back at the Four Seasons, but many attendees were too emotionally drained to attend. As one guest put it, "I opened my program to an ad for Lunesta, and the list of side-effects applied to the opera: 'May induce lightheadedness, dizziness, agitation and hallucinations.'"

MUST BE THE PUSH-UP BRA...

After a 10-year hiatus, the Boston Center for the Arts revived its much-beloved Artists' Ball, and judging by the number of people who came in costume, it's a damn good thing they did.

On hand at the Cyclorama for the Toulouse-Lautrec/Moulin Rouge–themed evening of dinner and dancing (to the supercool Edith Piaf cover band Ziaf) was a young and sexy crowd that included newlyweds Philip Lovejoy and Jim Moses, realtor-to-royalty John O'Connor and his other half, artist David Reichert, Globe jefe Marty Barron, the superglamorous Anna Cheshire Levitan, restaurateurs Gordon and Fiona Hamersley and Darryl Settles, world-renowned architect David Hacin and the impish Tim Grafft, ubiquitous socialite Kathy Taylor, Cambridge siren Laura Spiro, the soignée Jacqui Budd, Harvard factotum Treorty Bartley, and one stunning lesbian who was overheard saying, "She left me for a Mormon from Mississippi, but the new one is way more gorgeous."

The Parisian vibe seemed to bring out people's permissiveness, as one widely respected M.D. made out with anyone—male or female—he could find, while a declaration of "I'm not wearing any underwear" elicited the response, "Neither am I!"

However, the evening's most amusing remark came from a man who was asked why he wasn't in costume, to which he replied, "After dinner, I'm changing into one of Racquel Welch's old outfits. I think I have the tits to pull it off."

PUTTING THE CART IN FRONT OF THE HORSE...

Overheard at the MassArt Annual Benefit Auction, which attracted such connoisseurs and c lectors as Trevania Henderson, Shei Marshall, Beth Johnson, Carla Cab and Ronni Casty, dealer Dan Elias, bar ing bigwig Dave Daglio, and the evenin lead sponsors, financial wonder twins Pa and Wesley Karger:

One woman was asked if she planned bid on anything, to which she repli "Yes. I have no wall space, but I'm sick my house and I'm looking for an excuse buy a new one." IB

CUSTOM DESIGNED AND MANUFACTURED IN BOSTON, EXCLUSIVELY BY WATER & FIRE.

A result of a long collaboration between an Italian design team and my staff at Water & Fire, these kitchens deliver the custom selection, build quality, and dependable deliveries unavailable with imported kitchens. WEDDING BELLS

Most of THE IMPROPER's readers are unmarried, so we publish lots of stories about the single life. But once a year, we turn our attention to the rite of passage that more than 70,000 people will experience in our state this year: marriage. Apparently, we take the commitment seriously in Massachusetts—we spend a lot of money on the event (more than $35K on average), and we've got the lowest divorce rate in the country.

In this issue, you'll find useful tips for planning the big day. We've gathered information on some interesting alternative venues, and advice from local wedding planners on handling the logistics. Writer Ezra Dyer, who's about to take the plunge himself, has tips for grooms on "helping" their brides and ensuring that the two aspects of the event that matter get done right. Meanwhile, fashion editor Victor Vargas shows you some of the prettiest looks for hitting the aisle in style.

FOR ST. PETE'S SAKE

The review of Café St. Petersburg (May 3) didn't show THE IMPROPER at its best. I don't know what the writer was thinking, but he doesn't know much about Russia and Russian life. The reference to grandma's chafing dish suggests that Mr. Mokriski hasn't been to many contemporary Russian homes for a meal. And I don't know why he thinks it's OK to call a Russian restaurant "ethnic," "quaint" and "Old World," when it's actually none of those things. I'm glad that he liked the Georgian wine, though.

SHALLOW GALS

Capturing your very own millionaire is, according to the sage-like writers of THE IMPROPER, the way to true happiness ("How to Marry a Millionaire," April 19). Not necessarily, however, for the poor sap who thinks he's found a woman who really loves him for himself, not his money. But hey, it's the age of equality for men and women, right? Who knew you could pretend your way into being interesting? If you write an article as gross and degrading to women as this one, have the guts to sign your name, because God help us all if it was written by women.

A BAD BATCH

The best bartenders are those who appreciate the foibles of their clientele and dispense timely, sincere advice with a spl of wit and compassion. I found it far from engrossing to read in this year's bartende issue (April 5) about those who are, inst so heavily involved in self-promotion. A it's difficult to fathom that there wasn't a single African-American listed in your t 25. Apparently your staff don't get out a often as they claim.

THE WORD

EDITED BY ERIN GRAHAM

NEW IN TOWN

A Shu Thing

Could lashes be the new lipstick? Staffers at Shu Uemura, Newbury Street's new Japanese cosmetics and skin-care boutique, think so. Lipsticks outnumber lash options by 10-to-3 at the Boston boutique (only the third in the States), but even so there are more than 30 types of handmade lashes, from natural-looking glue-on strips and lash clusters to exotic lashes with bright faux fur, imitation diamonds and feathers.

Shu's lash bar lets you "try on" the styles: It's stocked with clear cubes, each containing a lash, that you hold up to your eye while peeking into the mirror. If you like what you see, staffers are ready to apply them—a free perk—in just under five minutes. You can also custom-order luxe styles like the mink falsies Madonna and Oprah made famous. Madge bought 200 pairs at $1,000 a pop, and Oprah sprung for 300. The price for non-tricked-out lashes is considerably lower, at $12–$25 per lash.

While the lash craze may seem new, Mr. Shu Uemura began beautifying American actresses with his lush lashes back in the 1950s, when he worked as a Hollywood makeup artist. Using his own lashes, cleanser and makeup, he worked on the famous faces of Shirley MacLaine, Elizabeth Taylor and Lucille Ball. His store still stocks the cleansing oil he created for them, selling for $30–$60 a bottle.

Putting the "artist" in makeup artist, Uemura, who returned to Japan after his Hollywood stint, is known for integrating artwork into his packaging and into each store's décor. Cleansing oil, deep sea water sprays, foundations and eye shadows all come in sleek, clear containers. Velvety-soft designer makeup brushes ($20–$400) are arranged to look like a bunch of colorful flowers. The store itself is pretty, too—the company selected Japanese kimono designer Mamechiyo to decorate the place with hundreds of beautiful, handmade acrylic butterflies that line the ceiling. Aiming to integrate Japanese and American cultures, she used kimono fabrics to create some butterflies and vintage American fabrics for others. Mamechiyo also modeled the butterflies' shapes on real Japanese and American species.

Mamechiyo sees the kimono connection clearly: "Both the kimono and Shu Uemura makeup transform women into beautiful objects. Just as a butterfly changes into something beautiful, that's what happens to women who come here. They leave as more beautiful women." 130 Newbury St., Boston (617-247-3500). www.shuuemura-usa.com. —EG

IB: What was your life like in Idaho?

Laura McPhee: I was there on and off over the cours two years. I would always come into the valley and like, "Oh no, what am I going to do while I'm here?"— huge sense of trepidation and foreboding. IB: People were surprised that your favorite room in th exhibition is one that includes both landscapes and pic tures of a butchered elk.

LM: That room really speaks to almost all the then was talking about. It speaks to mortality, it speaks to life cycle, it speaks to great beauty and the beauty of mortality, also. It speaks to land use and the way we try to divide it up. We build fences. There's the issue of ownership and how we try to break up space. But in the face of those mountains, it seems very insignificant. —Joel Brown

Say "Kibble!"... We aren't sure we've ever actually seen an animal smile (except, of course, for the occasional monkey), which makes orthodontist and animal lover Dr. Mouhab Rizkallah's Best Pet Smile Photo Contest even more intriguing. Anyone who thinks their pet sports a killer smile can enter by submitting a picture of the smiling pet, along with a $10 registration fee. Pets of all types are eligible, and first-, second- and third-place winners get gift certificates to Pet Supplies Plus. The first-place winner also gets a free pet dental exam at Angell Memorial Animal Hospital. Proceeds go to Angell's new dental unit. Send entries by May 31 to Amy Miller at Orthodontics at Davis Square, 30 College Ave., Somerville, 02144.

Revenge of the Nerds... Jeff MacIsaac and Luke Park, respectively the entertainment manager and head chef at River Gods, are gamers—and proud of it. They're the motivation behind the Central Square spot's new monthly event, Night of the Nerds, which offers thousands of old-school video games through a large-screen setup where four people can play at a time using wireless controllers. The May 30 event, sponsored by local game company Harmonix, features Guitar Hero, in which players strum along to classic rock songs using a guitar-shaped controller. Other games on the night's agenda are Atari's Joust, Midway's Galaga and Centipede, and one of MacIsaac's personal favorites, Burger Time, a game that involves a chef who makes burgers while being chased by little sausages, pickles and eggs. 125 River St., Cambridge (617-576-1881).

BUCKWHEAT IN A HEADLOCK

Take out your coursebooks and prepare to get schooled in yo' momma jokes.

When I was in college, I took an improv course in which one whole class consisted of everyone giving each other massages. I took a course on leadership in which two classes were devoted to watching The Lord of the Flies. During my senior year I cardio-kickboxed my way to something called a "wellness" credit. And, in a perfect example of why I hate poetry, in one intro poetry class I found myself in a heated argument with an English literature Ph.D. who, in explaining the proper use of meter, used the word "garage"—and insisted that it's one syllable. "Ga-rage?" I asked, "How would you say 'garage' with only one syllable?" He looked incredibly irritated at my ignorance and replied, "Grage! One syllable."

I think you can see where I'm going, here. You might not be aware of this, but I was the 1989 Jefferson Village School spelling bee champion. Also, Boston has a lot of colleges. Ergo, why am I not teaching a class at some college? Other writers teach classes, and unlike some of them whose names rhyme with Moris Mearns Moodwin, I haven't had to revise any of my books because of copyright issues (this is partly because I haven't written any books). You'd think I'd be beating off deans with a stick. Why am I not at least an adjunct professor somewhere? Is it because I just made myself laugh when I typed the phrase "beating off"? Or because I don't know what "adjunct" means? Either way, you're out of line, Emerson.

Most English professors have a particular specialty of some sort: premodern deconstructionist dwarf parables, or representation of the "other" in nouveau-riche post-Jurassic literalism. My speciality is yo' momma jokes. Is Alan Dershowitz going to teach yo' momma jokes? No. It's up to me, not just to teach yo' momma jokes that you can use, but, in the great liberal arts tradition, to help my students develop a way of thinking that they can use to create their own yo' momma jokes. Give a man a yo' momma joke, he'll insult yo' momma once, but teach a man to make up his own yo' momma jokes, and he'll insult yo' momma till the kickstand falls off her peg leg (see footnote 2.5, the Pharcyde, "Yo mama").

I understand that part of getting a college to hire you is being able to construct a summary of your course that sounds much more complicated than it actually is. For instance, MIT has a writing course called "Reading and Writing Autobiography." It's described thusly: "Since you're an MIT kid, here's your chance to write about get wedgies and winning a lot of math me Actually, that's my description. The one reads, in part, "By the end of the se ter you will have written autobiograph essays exploring your intellectual gro and development, your years in high sch the influence of place upon your chara and personality, the role politics and gion play in your life, and other topics. maybe all I need to hit that fast trac tenure is a catchy description: "Matriarc Metaphor: Students will explore the ro the mother figure in popular discourse, a focus on vigorous daily discussions of aesthetics, fiscal health and personal giene habits of one another's mommas."

Let's assume class is in session for ment. Today we'll tackle the subject of exactly, yo' momma is so ugly. Is yo' mom so ugly that John C. Reilly fans ask he her autograph? Is she so ugly that mosqui won't bite her? Perhaps yo' momma's so a black hole spit her out.

YO' MOMMA'S SO POOR, SHE FOUND A NICKEL ON TH GROUND AND RETIRED

When devising a "yo' momma's so u joke, it's important to consider the tang qualities that render the momma in q tion so dang ugly. Maybe she's particul ugly because she's old. In that case, History Channel has a new show calle Momma. Yo' momma's birth certifica written in hieroglyphics. Yo' mom works at Medieval Manor and wears prom dress.

Furthermore, yo' momma's so stupid saw a sign on a door that said "push" sc crapped herself. Yo' momma's so poor, found a nickel on the ground and retired momma's so stupid, she took Mario Will instead of Reggie Bush with the first pic the NFL draft (only applicable when opponent's momma is the Houston Tex

If yo' momma's a college administr looking to hire a new professor, have give me a call—assuming she can phones with those Mitch Albom c flower ears. iB

THAT'S RICH

BY RICH [illegible]

Confessions of a Recovering Soxaholic

Three years sober, and never felt better

On Aug. 21, 2003, I took a vow that would forever change my life as a Red Sox fan.

I was working a miserable night shift at my former job, which was typically about as much fun as having your leg gnawed off by a pack of rabid hyenas. But this night was different. That's because the Sox were in Oakland and about to take the field for what was undoubtedly the biggest game of the season.

The A's held a mere two-game advantage on Boston for the Wild Card with about a month left in the season, but with the way Tejada, Chavez & Co. were playing, a three-game deficit would've felt like 10. I wasn't worried, though; Pedro was on the mound, and things would be all right.

Then the worst happened: At the last minute, the announcement came that Martinez had been scratched from the start, and taking his place was perennial mop-up man Casey Fossum. I nearly blacked out. The season was over: They'd lose the game and fall three back, and on top of that, Pedro was injured. I'd wasted yet another summer freaking out about this goddamn team.

I thought about going out like Michael Douglas in Falling Down. I'd break my keyboard over my knee, throw a chair through the window and simply walk out the back door, to forever wallow in the crap of yet another disappointing Red Sox season. It sounds like I'm exaggerating, but it was really that bad. I was that guy. I was inconsolable.

But instead of going the felonious route (mostly because I couldn't afford to pay for a new window), I looked at myself in the mirror and made this resolution:

"Rich, you're a basket case every year from April to September. You obsess over every loss. You write players off after early-season slumps. You once dedicated an entire summer to booing Reggie Jefferson. You're pathetic. So here's the deal: If the Sox make the playoffs this year, you're not allowed to act like a psychopath anymore. It will be proof that, short of a 2-20 start or a 15-game losing streak in early August, September is all that matters. Life is too important, and the season far too long, for you to get this crazy."

There it was, and you can guess what happened next: Fossum pitched a decent game, Manny and Papi went deep and the Sox won 14–5. They subsequently won 15 of the next 20 games on their way to taking the Wild Card and con within five outs of the World Se Sure, Grady Little's brain fart in ALCS hurt more than I could ever plain, but after a month or so, I w changed man. Three seasons later, never looked back, and you know wh couldn't be happier.

So where does this leave me among population of Red Sox Nation? W probably in the distinct minority. It's that I don't care anymore, it really i I'm still at Fenway once or twice a w hosing down $7 beers, heckling oppo fans and cheering just as loudly as I al have, but now I look around at the sitting near me—the guys who live and with every pitch—and I see my old one who truly didn't enjoy a single Sox season from 1987–2002.

And even though (considering th wasn't so long ago that I was on them) what I'm about to say is abou hypocritical as Bill Clinton giving a ture on the immorality of adulte can't resist: Guys, it's the middle of gin' May!

SHORT OF A 2-2 START OR A 15-GAM LOSING STREAK I EARLY AUGUST SEPTEMBER IS AL THAT MATTERS

I know that Loretta's struggling big t that Wily Mo makes Manny look like druw Jones in the outfield; that Gon swings like he's using a toothpick at plate; and that Tek's barely hitting But listen to me: It doesn't matter. No it does.

Just sit back, relax, sing "Sweet Caro and save your energy and pacemaker ba ies for Aug. 18. That's when the Yan come to town for a ridiculous five-gam ries, and that's when the season really s Until then, I'll be kicking back and enj the Sox. Believe me, it's a lot more fun obsessing over them. IB

THE DANC

Wedding Trashers

Love might not rejoice in evil, but it doesn mind a good joke.

People have long been playing wedding pranks, some of them more memorable than the weddings themselves. After the wedding for one of my friends, the groom was taking a shower, preparing to change into traveling clothes for the honeymoon. His ushers poured a five-pound bag of dehydrated cow manure over the shower curtain. The smell was impossible to erase, lasting for days. At another reception, a group of ushers got hold of the groom's luggage and padlocked all of his suitcases shut. Another tale told to me had the ushers holding down the groom and covering his feet, ankles, and genitals with gentian violet paint, giving him purple appendages, perfect for Aruba.

The bachelor party has always been an occasion for risky business. There seemed to be a fairly routine formula years ago, mostly for the ridicule of the groom and fun 'n' games for the attendees. A room would be taken at some seedy hotel. The best man, hip to this stuff, would rent a movie projector and a few underground skin flicks featuring men in black shoes and short socks, and women seemingly from the Victorian era in terms of heft but who got the job done. There would be a bottle of scotch, a bottle of bourbon, a bottle of gin, ice and mixers—and, sometimes, one or two hookers.

Recently the trend has been for the groom and his buddies to head for Vegas or Miami. These adventures typically go for two to three days with little or no sleep involved. My friend Tim recently reported on a Vegas outing. "We got off the plane drunk and never lost the buzz," Tim told me. "My job was to keep the groom from doing anything really stupid. There's always someone assigned to the groom. We gambled, drank and hit about three strip clubs, lookin' for love in all the wrong places. Free love, too, but no one was offering us that. Vegas' women of the night are gorgeous, but you've gotta get them early. And after 24 hours it all gets old."

I was an usher at a wedding in Columbus, Ohio, where, after the rehearsal dinner, the groom, in dinner jacket, was climbing on top of car hoods in downtown Columbus singing, "I'm getting married in the mornin', ding dong the bells are gonna chime," from My Fair Lady. The night-before shenanigans were blamed on the ushers. These exploits are never blamed on the groom, because the mother of the bride usually turns a blind eye to anyone taking her daughter away. And all fathers cry, openly or inwardly, never thinking that anyone is worthy of their little girl. M fathers of brides, in my experience, als in denial that their daughters ever summate the marriage. When their had babies, many friends, whether Jew Protestant or Buddhist, have said, "It an immaculate conception."

In recent years, the bachelorette cele tion has given new meaning to the ex sion "horror show." And some of the st I've heard recently make me think w headed for Amazon nation. A relati tame tale featured drinks at a South drag bar, laughs but nothing too rac Rocky Horror show with Cosmopolit Another party was described with glee the scene. changed. You get a hotel suite. Several play porn with the sound turned off cause we've got our own tunes goin' s can dance. Bottom line: Why should have all the fun? Women rock 'n' rule.

This may all be true. No one who k me could consider me a prude. But I d for the success of long-term relations particularly marriage. Like Hemingw I've seen nothing sacred.

Another woman friend told me tha was recently in the Theater District, w ing to dinner, when a party bus drov full of young women. The windows down and the occupants were screami passersby. My friend looked up as o the screamers yelled, "Bachelorette!" pointed to her neighbor on the bus. neighbor, wearing a white veil, was ously the bride-to-be. While my fr watched, the bride pulled up her T- and flaunted her bare breasts to ever walking by. Her friends all cheered an bus rolled on.

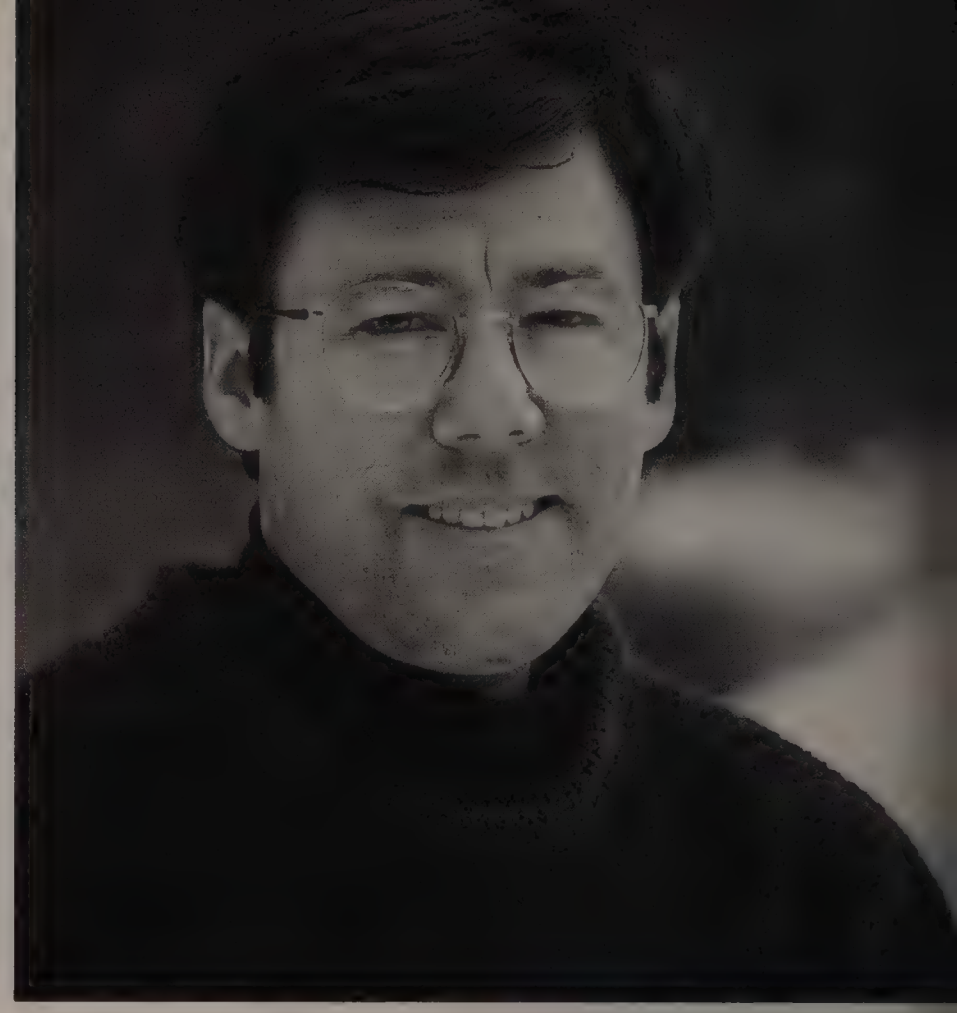
DAVID SIBLEY

BY JONATHAN SOROFF



The world's leading illustrator of birds and author of bird watching's most popular field guides, David Allen Sibley has set book sales records, and his volumes are virtual bibles among serious birders. The son of eminent ornithologist Fred Sibley, he was born in upstate New York and lived in Virginia, California and Connecticut, where he graduated from Guilford High School. He began bird-watching at the age of seven, and after his freshman year at Cornell, he left school to devote all his time to the hobby. The Sibley Guide to Birds, originally released in 2000, represents over 12 years of his work studying and painting birds. Since then, he's published four more guides and is now widely recognized as one of the world's leading authorities on bird species and their behavior. He lives in Concord with his wife and two sons.

Jonathan Soroff: You're the 21st-century Audubon. How does that feel?

David Sibley: [Laughs.] It's weird. There are a lot of similarities between what I do and what he did, but obviously a lot of differences.

JS: Wasn't he a bit of a psycho?

DS: I wouldn't call him that, but he was a unique character, and I've enjoyed reading his journals. He would brag about things like walking from Philadelphia to New York in three days, or walking 15 miles before breakfast, looking at birds and maybe shooting at them.

JS: Have you ever killed a bird?

DS: I have. Part of my father's job—he was an ornithologist at Yale—was collecting specimens for the museum, so he did most of the killing, but I was involved. I was an accessory.

JS: Best place in the world for birding?

DS: One of my favorite places is Cape May, New Jersey. Despite its reputation as the armpit of North America, New Jersey has some spectacular natural areas, and Cape May is the southern tip. They say, "A bad day at Cape May is better than a good day of birding almost anywhere else."

JS: What three things should all good birders have?

DS: Patience, an ability to see patterns or fit the details into a bigger picture—to see not only the trees but how they make the forest—and a healthy dose of humility.

JS: I thought you'd say something like binoculars, sturdy shoes and a Sibley guide…

DS: [Laughs.] I thought about it. Binoculars, a field guide and a sketchbook are the three practical things.

JS: Hardest thing for you to render accurately?

DS: I've painted 800 species, and the most difficult were the very elusive pigeon, crow, robin, starling…

I ONCE DROVE FROM GEORGIA TO NOVA SCOTIA, ABOUT 40 STRAIGHT HOURS, THROUGH BLIZZARDS TO SEE A EURASIAN KESTREL.

JS: So familiarity breeds contempt?

DS: Maybe familiarity gave me more information than I could deal with. What I try to do is show a few images that are the perfect average stereotype of the species, and with those I think I knew them too well and had too much information.

JS: Do you have a fear of flying?

DS: No, I love it. I really enjoy the feeling of being up there above the trees and seeing the world from a bird's-eye view.

JS: Is the idea of discovering a new species a Holy Grail of yours?

DS: Yeah. That's sort of the ultimate achievement in bird-watching.

JS: Most beautiful bird in the world?

DS: The really flashy, colorful ones—the hooded warbler has always been one of my favorites. Then there's the swallow-tailed kite, which is incredibly gorgeous and graceful in flight, with a very elegant shape.

JS: A bird you think is really ugly?

DS: I've always put a few species, like the American coot, near the bottom of the list, but none are really ugly.

JS: Rarest bird you've ever seen?

DS: Well, there are two different definitions of rarity: One's a bird that there are only a few of in the world, like a Californian condor, which I saw when there were less than 10 left in the wild. But what bird watchers consider rare is a bird that's off course, like a Siberian bird that's somehow found its way to the East Coast of North America. In that sense, I guess the red-footed falcon (a Central Asian/Eastern European bird) on Martha's Vineyard a few years ago.

JS: Greatest lengths or hardship you've ever gone to to see a bird?

DS: I once drove from Georgia to Nova Scotia, about 40 hours straight, through blizzards, to see a bird called a Eurasian kestrel.

JS: Most exotic locale?

DS: Last summer, I went to the central Aleutian Islands, which I'd say is just about the most remote place I've ever been to.

JS: Do you think the bald eagle is a good choice as the nation's bird?

DS: Well, in the sense that eagles and birds of prey are associated with courage and liberty, yes. But I think Benjamin Franklin had some very good points when he argued for the turkey. The bald eagle is not much of a hunter. It's more of a scavenger. It steals fish from other birds. It will eat dead fish. It's not the most courageous or warriorlike, whereas the wild turkey is resourceful and cunning, and plentiful, and smart enough to stay alive despite being hunted relentlessly.

JS: Strangest bit of bird behavior you've ever seen?

DS: I was in Corpus Christi at a chicken farm, which attracts a lot of vultures, and I saw a vulture walk up to a crested caracara (a kind of falcon) and start scratching the back of its neck. It's the only time I've seen one species of bird preening another unrelated species like that.

JS: What would you pay to see a pterodactyl?

DS: Wow. Just about anything. If there was one to see, I'd find a way to get there.

JS: Favorite bird name?

DS: Probably the hoopoe. It's a Europ bird and its Latin name is Upupa Epops JS: Most pornographic bird name, like titmouse, or booby?

DS: [Chuckles.] Well, in Britain they h great tits and blue tits, and there are j about an ornithologist publishing a p with a title like "Great Tits I Have Kno or "Blue Tits in Winter."

JS: Do you wake up to birdsong every morning?

DS: Yeah. I live in Concord, and in yard there are five or six species that singing every morning.

JS: How do birds that talk do that?

DS: They're just mimicking sounds hear around them. They could just as e do a cell phone or a car alarm. But have done studies on species like African gray parrot, which have lea hundreds of words and express ideas.

JS: OK, biggest mystery about birds?

DS: I'd like to know how a bird can fin way from South America to the same acre of forest in, say, Ontario every yea

JS: You've gotten rich off what is a hobby most people. Biggest change in your life fr the success of your guides?

DS: I don't have as much time for my hc

JS: Last question: If you were a bird, wh kind would you be, and why?

DS: Well, my first choice, despite the n would be a brown booby. It's a tro seabird that lives in the Caribbean o tropical Pacific. They eat fish, which and they're very graceful, strong fliers, the way they catch their fish, they fly the ocean and dive straight into the like the best Olympic diver you've ever leaving almost no splash. Then the back to a coral reef sandbar to hang with their friends, and that just sound a good life to me. IB

The Less Traveled Aisle

For intrepid spouses-to-be, a wedding venue off the beaten path can make a perfect day even better.

BY COURTNEY HUMPHRIES

In their search for the perfect spot for their wedding, many couples are looking for something with a unique flavor—and alternative venues around the city are more than happy to oblige. Here are some lesser-known places around Boston for your ceremony or reception, each with a distinctive character.

Something Old, Something New

The Commandant's House may be the oldest new venue on Boston's wedding scene. While this historic house hosted a few weddings last year, it's just opening up to the broader public this summer after being renovated over the winter. Built 200 years ago, the large and stately building served as a residence for the U.S. Navy's commandant, who led the construction of naval ships in Boston Harbor. After shipbuilding was halted in Boston in 1974, the house went largely unused for the past quarter century. The National Park Service eventually saw its potential and decided in 1999 to open the house up to functions and events, starting a contract last year with Amelia Occasions for event coordination.

Lynne Dombroski, one of the few people to be married at the house last year, says she liked the city views and proximity to tourist attractions at what feels like a more suburban site. "You're almost right in the city, yet there's this feeling that you could be out in the country somewhere," she says.

Sitting on a grassy hill in the Naval Yard, the Commandant's House has both indoor and outdoor options for wedding ceremonies and receptions. Porches and a large, windowed foyer make a perfect place for serving drinks and socializing. Three interior rooms joined by wide doorways create a large central area, and smaller parlors on the lower and upper levels offer private spaces, including a bride's changing room with adjoining bathroom. The wooden floors, chandeliers and white wooden trim evoke an Old World ball rather than a house in the city. Down a flight of stone steps from the house are two lawns with a view of the USS Constitution, the harbor and downtown Boston. A tent can be set up on either or both of the lawns for outdoor dinners or dancing.

Details: The house is available year-round; the lawn is available in warmer months. Rental fees are $3,500 for the house and $1,200 for the lawn. Capacity is up to 250 guests indoors and up to 550 for both the house and lawn.

Moraine Farm hosts outdoor weddings in its sunken garden, complete with teahouse.

The Pastor and the Pastoral

As you head down the long dirt drive at the entrance to Moraine Farm, you just might forget you're a short distance from the strip malls of Route 1 and start to believe you've entered a Jane Austen novel. This 180-acre estate in Beverly was one of the few residences designed by Frederick Law Olmsted, the mastermind behind Boston's Emerald Necklace and New York's Central Park, and because it's been in private hands for so long, it's also one of his best-preserved spaces. "It's a discovery," says events manager Melissa Landsvik.

The main house, which is now used as a conference center, is an understated stone building with wooden trim. A semicircular veranda in the back offers a view of Wenham Lake and the surrounding forests. Near the house is a lush lawn with a teahouse perched above a sunken garden, a popular site for outdoor ceremonies or tented receptions. Beyond the house lie open pastures, farm buildings, cultivated grounds and an extensive woodland with trails leading into an adjoining nature preserve.

The estate is now owned by a nonprofit named Project Adventure, which provides experiential education programs for at-risk kids and other groups, and money from rentals helps support Project Adventure's mission.

Details: Available year-round. Rental fees run from $1,500 to $5,000, depending on the day of the week and number of guests. Accommodates up to 275 guests for tented outdoor events, up to 75 for indoor winter weddings.

The Love Boat

If your wedding fantasies involve getting married aboard your true love's priv yacht, the Odyssey might be the next best thing in the real world. This megaya docked just outside the Boston Harbor Hotel is also a fun option for entertaining y guests—a swanky version of the beloved booze cruise around Boston harbor. The la upper deck can be the site for an onboard ceremony, and the deck below has a full- vice restaurant and dance floor.

The Odyssey offers several all-inclusive packages for ceremonies and receptio making it a nice choice for anyone who gets panic attacks at the idea of hunting caterers and shopping for wedding cakes. Guests choose food from a full menu on ship, and the staff can take care of everything from cake to DJ. The captain can e conduct a ceremony for you.

Leah Gibson, who had her reception on the Odyssey last October, says she was tially skeptical about having her reception on a boat, but decided that it offered m than other venues. She liked the attentive service and the fact that guests could da inside or enjoy the city views from the deck outside. "It was unbelievable," Gibson s

Details: Package prices for ceremonies range from $1,500 to $2,500; recept cruises range from $62 to about $160 per person. Rehearsal dinners and day-a brunches are also available.

The Adolphus Busch Hall and Garden offers a smaller alternative to Harvard's popular reception site, the Fogg Art Museum, which will be closed for extensive renovations at the end of next year. Built in the early 1900s to house German art, Busch Hall was home to the Busch-Reisinger Museum until 1987, and although it's open to the public one Sunday a month, it's now used primarily as a site for parties, receptions and concerts.

The main room, called Romanesque Hall, has space for a seated dinner or standing reception. The room is built in a medieval style and is lined with large stone statues and plaster casts of German art, which were used to educate Harvard students about German culture in the days when going overseas was onerous. The hall also contains a world-renowned organ that is still kept in tune. Though the vaulted ceiling and Gothic style can seem imposing, the right lighting can transform this space into a cozy site for smaller receptions.

Adjoining the rotunda entrance into the hall is an outdoor terrace and garden, which can also be used for a seated dinner, with a reflecting pool, flowering plants and scattered benches. The garden is enclosed on all sides, making it a private outdoor space for drinks or dancing in warmer months. Like other Harvard art museums, the space is available for receptions only. Jason Rogers, facilities rental coordinator for the site, says that people often use the Swedenborg Chapel across the street for ceremonies.

Details: The hall and garden must be rented together and are available year-round on weekday evenings and anytime on weekends. A fee of $4,200 covers a seven-hour rental; extra hours may be purchased on the weekend for $200 an hour. All events must end by midnight. Fits 90 seated, 100 standing.

The funky Cyclorama can be dressed up for a sit-down event.

With This Ring

The Cyclorama is a building like no other in Boston. Built in Boston's South End in 1884, its original purpose—to house a huge panoramic painting of the Battle of Gettysburg—is itself a little offbeat. Later the building's tin roof was replaced with a large skylight dome. Now the space is used for private and public functions, with proceeds benefiting the BCA's theaters, artist residencies and studios.

An open circular space, lined in brick and lit from above by its skylight and high windows, the Cyclorama has infinite potential. "It's the ultimate black box," says Alison Buck of Charmed Places, a wedding planner who specializes in finding out-of-the-way wedding sites. When lit by candlelight at night, the room feels intimate. And it can be dressed up with decorations, or left bare for a simpler look. It's a good spot for couples who want more creative control over their wedding than just picking the flowers.

That tabula rasa quality can also make it a great option for ceremonies. As facilities director Jennifer Brown says, it's simply "a big, round, brick room under the heavens." The Cyclorama is one of the rare buildings that can evoke the spiritual while being completely nondenominational.

What you do with the space is up to you, but that doesn't mean you'll be left alone to figure it out. Brown says the BCA staff is on hand to help plan and assist before and during the wedding, and they work with vendors to help transform the space. Anna Roi, who held her reception at the Cyclorama last September with husband Bryan, says, "We chose the Cyclorama because we love its South End location and the raw, urban feel of the space. We never intended to fully cover any of that up." Working with event designers at Party by Design, the couple decorated the room with sheer fabric panels, paper lanterns, candlelight and furniture to create lounge spaces.

Details: Available year-round. The base fee is $5,000 for the entire day. Capacity is 1,200 standing, 875 seated.

people think "wedding" when they step into one of Boston's most popular tourist nations, but the New England Aquarium offers large indoor spaces, an outdoor tent a harbor view, and a chance for your guests to commune with exotic marine life—o mention that the money spent on your wedding supports the Aquarium's mission ucation and conservation.

he Aquarium contracts with the Boston Culinary Group for catering, and they can ide anything from a clambake and ice cream bar to an elegant dinner. Aquarium can also arrange for flowers, decorations, a DJ and other details. You have the op- of holding a reception indoors, where guests are free to roam the exhibits or, in the her months, to head out to the large tent behind the building.

r a truly unique ceremony, your guests can line up along the ramp that spirals nd sharks, morays, sea turtles and tropical fish in the Aquarium's trademark 200,000-gallon tank. The bride, after passing down the ramp, joins the groom at the penguin pit. Be prepared for a few squawks from your guests, as the penguins have been known to participate. The only downside: You may get tired of hearing the inevitable penguin-groom comparisons.

Details: After-hours evening rentals only. Available year-round for indoor space, May to September for the outdoor tent. The average cost of rental fees is $2,000, and a wedding (with the works) for 100 guests costs about $30,000. Several spaces are available accommodating up to 700 standing and 200 seated indoors, up to 525 standing and 420 seated outdoors.

How Three Couples Lived Apart and Wound Up Together

Long-Distance Love

BY SEETHA NARAYAN

When several friends showed up in New York unannounced to crash at Erika's place—including her ex-boyfriend—she was relieved that her current boyfriend, Joel, lived in faraway Boston. In a bad movie you could predict the rest: Joel surprises her with a visit, Erika begs, Joel storms out, and the romance is officially on the rocks. The lesson: That's what you get for being in a long-distance relationship.

But long-distance relationships are seldom that brittle. Joel did surprise Erika with a visit and leave after a terse hello, but soon turned his car around. Erika hadn't done anything wrong, and he was made of sterner stuff than ex-envy. Their long-distance relationship continued and ended in marriage. According to the Center for the Study of Long-Distance Relationships, which researches such things, the odds of their making it were pretty good—the same, in fact, as for any other couple. That's good news for roughly 7 million U.S. couples, 40 percent or so of them married, who are currently doing long distance.

We found three living examples: Boston couples who made their relationships work and swear that distance, far from forcing them to scrape by on scraps of love, made their unions richer and stronger.

The Why of Distance

Distance can be part of a professional package—think soldiers, ruckers, traveling salesmen, pilots and flight attendants. When mes Flannery signed on with the Coast Guard, he knew he'd ove around. He explained this to Robin Pedersen, whom he met nd fell for during his stint in graduate school at Tufts. She pre-ared herself. But when a position in Baltimore came through for mes, so did new opportunities for Robin at Novartis in Cam-ridge. They weren't yet officially engaged and, being eminently ractical, decided Robin should stay in Boston for her job while mes set up house and ship in Baltimore.

While Robin and James began dating when they lived in the me city, some start out dating distant others, which begs the ques-on: Why can't these people just find someone nearby? After all, e world's full of single people searching for partners. Well, that's eat if you just want a warm body; but if you seek someone like-inded you have to find the person first and overcome obstacles ter. Erika Davis lived in New York when she met Joel Miller rough mutual friends in Boston. They hit it off at a party a few ears later, finding a shared mindset and values. Like other couples at start out apart, they dealt with the uncertainty of not knowing hether the fascination would hold up over distance and time.

You might also choose long distance as part of an unspoken pact with fe: We'll make these sacrifices, you give us these rewards, and it had etter turn out right or we'll be upset. Kirk Tanner and Navid Madani, oth scientists in Boston, were in San Diego and married for three years hen the graduate school bug bit Navid. Kirk was already in the middle f a doctorate in San Diego, but he cheered her on when she decided the est opportunity for her was in Portland, Ore. Thus began a saga of com-uter flights, late-night labs, and sacrifices for love and science.

Distance That Binds

ong distance seems very little about pining, roses and phone sex. Vhat it's actually about is different for each couple, a matter of cir-mstance, chemistry and personal traits.

For Erika and Joel, it was a matter of slaying personal demons while eking financial stability. Once, right after Joel had visited, Erika felt vercome by fears of abandonment. "I kept thinking, 'This is how it'll el when he leaves me,'" she says. But he called from the road to say e loved her and they'd see each other soon, and that reassurance, ming at a vulnerable moment, put the fear to rest.

They pulled each other up. Erika gave Joel gifts—things he'd men-on needing as he established his business, like a briefcase. Joel came rough when Erika quit a job: The reality of her situation hit her hen she was at the gym, and she started bawling, but the next day e got a check from Joel with a note saying they'd get through it to-ther. It abated the panic and helped her pull herself together.

They broke up once, but that lasted all of two days. Joel asked for me to establish his business, and Erika agreed to put her expectations marriage on hold. "I felt uncomfortable the next visit," says Erika, ut the feeling subsided with time."

For Robin and James, it's a matter of discovering strengths and nits. They have friends in Boston, but James finds himself a social ybrid in Baltimore: single but unavailable and without single iends, and a third wheel among military couples. The stress nerges in phone calls with Robin, who is often out with Boston iends she's known for years. "You should set aside more time for e," he says.

"I remind him that I'm going to leave all this behind—friends, mily, work—for him one day," says Robin. The distance has helped em define their roles with each other. "We're both meticulous and ganized," says James, "but away from work, Robin gives me a break m always having to be on top of my game." Robin willingly accepts e responsibility. When we spoke, James was visiting Robin in ston. "This morning she gave me a checklist," he says. What was it? "Get the cars looked at, finalize our honeymoon itinerary and," laughs, "talk to you." Robin sums up the honing of their relation-ip. "The distance has made me realize I was more independent an I thought, and it made him realize he's dependent on me to me extent."

Erika Davis and Joel Miller kept up a NY–Boston courtship and are now married and living in Boston.

For Navid and Kirk, the distance involved sacrifice for future rewards. Navid applied only to places where Kirk could conceivably get a postdoc. It was a risk, since Kirk would still have to apply and be accepted for one. They projected he'd do that in a year when he was finished with his doctorate, but the timeline proved slippery. "The science process always takes longer than you want," says Kirk about his studies. A projected separation of one year ended up lasting two and a half.

Since Navid was beginning grad school, and consequently under less deadline-related pressure that first year in Portland than Kirk, she was able to travel to San Diego to see Kirk more often than he could fly out to her. Flight attendants on the 9 am commuter flight recognized, and began greeting, the face they saw so regularly.

When Navid's citizenship papers came up for review, Kirk flew in for the INS interview. They wondered if the INS officer believed they had a real marriage despite living apart. She finally cracked a smile when she looked at a phone bill: Kirk and Navid had talked every 10 minutes on a football Sunday to swap sports commentary as they sat in front of their televisions. Clearly, the relationship was for real.

Kirk Tanner and Navid Madani got married and then lived apart for grad school.

Robin Pedersen and James Flannery met in Boston, but a Coast Guard career took James to Baltimore. They'll be married this fall.

Under One Roof

It was a relief for these couples to finally come together. There were transitional pressures for Kirk and Navid when he joined her in Portland. "I was writing my thesis, getting publications and doing my postdoc at the same time," says Kirk. Navid had a routine and a set of friends. "In a new situation, Kirk is shy," says Navid. "I'd usually want to make sure he was enjoying himself." In Portland, by herself, she'd gotten used to not worrying about it, and once together they realized this was okay. Navid could go places without him, and Kirk could decline company after an exhausting day.

When they finished their studies, they looked for places he could apply where Navid could also find work. "It was his turn," she says simply. Kirk decided a position in Boston interested him the most, so Navid got funding and took a position at Harvard Medical School. They've been happily together in Boston for over six years.

After their wedding Erika and Joel had a smooth transition setting up house in Boston, but one thing changed. During their long-distance days, they'd brought their families into their fights. "We relied on them because we were apart," says Erika. After marriage they were arguing once, and she picked up the phone to call a family member, then stopped when she figured that the argument could be blown out of proportion in the telling. "We realized it was time to start resolving our fights on our own," says Erika. It took living under the same roof to carve out private space.

As for Robin and James, we'll have to wait, since their Boston wedding isn't until September. They've recently compiled Excel spreadsheets to assess pros and cons of opportunities that promote James' career while allowing Robin to continue hers.

Reflections On the Road Much Traveled

For couples who've survived their time apart, it's an experience of strengthen through stress. Not every long-distance couple will make it, but that may have les do with the distance than the simple fact that it's a challenge, and challenges can h you see just how compatible you and your significant other are.

For Robin and James, the long distance is too fresh for philosophy, but they're ready putting words to what makes them different. "In the past, I overlooked all thoughtful things Robin did for me in Boston. When we were apart, I realized says James. "We got to know each other through long distance," says Robin. "The lationship, for so many weeks and months, is based on communication rather th on being together."

Hearing the other two couples tell it is like listening to seasoned generals reminisc about great battles they've won. "Kirk and I made sacrifices for each other's success. do that in your 20s," Navid remarks, "so that you're set for the rest of your life."

Kirk feels the experience made them stronger. "I feel good about where we are nc Like a responsible scientist, he qualifies: "Maybe we'd have reached this point anyv Whether or not it's the product of long distance, I don't know."

Erika says she became confident, through tests of distance, that the relationship not brittle but resilient. "I look at my friends who've never been through this," she s "and it seems like Joel and my fascination runs deeper, our relationship is emotion richer because of what we've been through. The long distance is a great way to ge know someone while getting to know yourself." IB wedding invites from Vellum

From arranging flowers to dealing with family, professional wedding planners explain how to make any wedding a piece of cake.

You did it. You're engaged. The ring's been accepted; the phone calls to family and friends are made—maybe you've even set the date. Now what? Months of planning are ahead, and as you know from watching friends go through it, the whole process can be overwhelming. To help you along the path to the big day, we found some experienced wedding planners and asked them to share their best advice for creating one special occasion.

BY LESLIE KILGORE PHOTOGRAPHS BY HENDERSON/CARTLEDGE PHOTOGRAPHY

What's the most important piece of advice you have for brides and grooms during the wedding-planning process?

Alexis Eliopoulos O'Mara of Unique Weddings by Alexis: Relax and enjoy being engaged. Stay on top of your to-do list so you don't feel rushed in the end.

Rachel LoVerme of WedBoston: Once your venue and date are set, hire the vendors that do only one event per day: the band, photographer and wedding planner. Caterers and florists can handle multiple events per day, so they're less likely to be booked solid far in advance.

IB: Are there any guidelines to go by or secrets to success for planning different types of weddings (traditional, outdoor, formal, casual)?

Rachel LoVerme: For more traditional or formal weddings, find a place to insert a bit of your personality or some humor—your guests won't expect it, but they'll definitely remember it.

Paula Mollov of All About Parties: Organization, organization, organization and a sense of humor.

Patricia Coughlin Shaw of Attention to Detail: Outdoor weddings can be tricky. If the wedding is taking place in your backyard, make sure you hire an electrician to ensure the wattage required for the event. Otherwise, you'll need to rent a generator.

Pamela Chase of Sophisticated Brides: Definitely communicate the tone of a casual wedding in your invitation, so your guests know how to dress and what to expect. If you're going casual, everything should be as well—from the invitations to the dress.

IB: What are some of your favorite alternative and traditional wedding spots in the Boston area?

Pamela Chase: The Wang Center for Performing Arts. It's unique and different, yet ornate, formal and grand.

Patricia Coughlin Shaw: Elm Bank in Wellesley is a wonderful location for an outdoor wedding.

Rachel LoVerme: The dining room at the old Ritz, the Boston Public Library and Castle Hill in Ipswich; for alternative spots, the Cyclorama in the South End or the Museum of Fine Arts.

IB: Which aspects of a wedding could be done economically and which are worth spending top dollar for?

Jennifer O'Malley of Trends & Traditions Events: I wouldn't skimp on food, music and photography.

Paula Mollov: The only things that last are your photographs and video. And if you have the money for it, a fabulous band is worth its weight in gold, as your guests will remember what a great time they had.

Pamela Chase: Money should definitely be spent on food and alcohol. A cash bar is tacky. Guests should never have to pay for their drinks.

IB: What are some tips to making a wedding/reception original—one your guests will remember and rave about?

Alexis Eliopoulos O'Mara: A fantastic venue, food and entertainment, and a reception that truly represents the couple's style and tastes.

Rachel LoVerme: Think out of the box with lots of meaningful touches. Guests remember the little things the most.

Nicole Wescott, director of weddings, Seaport Hotel, Boston: A happy couple, with all the people they love surrounding them. Everything else is icing on the cake.

IB: What are the top wedding trends you're seeing these days for locations, ceremonies and receptions?

Patricia Coughlin Shaw: Brides and grooms are looking at more unique spaces these days—museums, cultural centers and even loft spaces.

Paula Mollov: Weddings are becoming entire-weekend events—from "early bird" pizza parties the day before and brunches the day after the wedding, to organized golf tournaments and spa visits, as well as rehearsal dinners with almost the entire guest list invited.

Pamela Chase: Many brides and grooms are opting for a secular service, with a friend or family member as the officiate. It's a relatively easy process. But it goes without saying, make sure you pick your officiate wisely.

Jennifer O'Malley: There are a lot of do-it-self projects to make things personal now also seeing pets incorporated into ceremo and many themed weddings.

IB: How about popular trends for dresses and flowers?

Rachel LoVerme: Instead of having one arrangement on each dinner table, try mu smaller arrangements, and vary them sli from table to table.

Linnea Tangorra of Tangorra Wedding Plan Brides are adding a little sparkle to their ers with the use of subtle jewels scat within their bouquet. And for dresses, I'm ing a variety of colors for each of the br maids, instead of requiring each to wea same dress or color.

Alexis Eliopoulos O'Mara: I'm seeing mor phisticated dresses, not as princess-like more—A-lines or sheath rather than tull petticoats. Lace has been a popular accen gowns lately. Veils are coming back this and brides are wearing them all night. Flo are more natural looking, slightly messy asymmetric.

Pamela Chase: Several of my clients have f in love with dresses from a magazine photo cost between $10,000–$20,000, and then t have a local designer produce a less expe knock-off in order to get what they want price in their budget.

IB: And what about food?

Rachel LoVerme: Couples want delicious co foods—mini burgers, mac 'n' cheese, or tend with mashed potatoes. But served creatively.

Alexis Eliopoulos O'Mara: Many entrée op sorbet courses; huge dessert buffets; and mu wedding cakes.

Pamela Chase: For fall or winter weddings, t menus with four to six smaller courses, p with red and white wines are very trendy summer weddings, couples are advised to ke food farm-fresh and not too heavy. For some more informal, couples are opting to capi New England theme with a lobster/clambak

IB: What's the best way to deal with family members pre-wedding day, and how should bri and grooms-to-be take charge, without hurting anyone's feelings?

Jennifer O'Malley: This is almost impos Smile, listen to their advice and take it w grain of salt.

Linnea Tangorra: Compromise with your lies—especially if they're helping to pay. want to feel important, so giving them enou tention and compliments on the wedding day he make them feel special.

IB: Are there any important tips or words of wisdom fo day of the wedding?

Rachel LoVerme: You'll always have one or two things you should've done or meant to do. Rela body will notice. Have copies of every contract c wedding day, so there's no time lost arguing if a de is incorrect.

Jennifer O'Malley: Eat, breathe, smile and take it all

Nicole Wescott: Take a few minutes in the middle reception for just you and your fiancé to be alon enjoy the moment. IB

The groom's guide to wedding planning

Much "I Do" About Nothing

BY EZRA DYER ILLUSTRATION BY NATE WILLIAMS

it from a guy who's only a few months away from ing down the aisle: Men have a delicate role in the ning of a wedding. In an ideal world, you'd propose, t about it and show up wearing a tux roughly a year . That's obviously not the way it works, yet you also get too involved, because your fiancée and future ner-in-law definitely have their own ideas about y aspect of the planning process, and it's a bad idea to on their toes. Your task, should you choose to accept nd really, you have no choice), is to act just inter- enough that they think you're helping, but not be gressive as to actually influence anything except the B's: the band and the bar. Everything else, from florist terer to invitations, is out of your hands, whether like it or not. So you'd better get started with you ecision-making. Those invitation fonts aren't going t-choose themselves.

The Florist

how a guy should help select a florist: Sit there and about how someday when you have a big garage, like to have green laser-animated dancing ladies on all, just like the ones in the Poison "Unskinny Bop" . Then, at a random moment of your choosing, as- ely say, "Well, lilacs would really set off your brides- s' dresses." When she says, "Those would look horri- with my bridesmaids' dresses, you moron," act ded and say, "Sorry, the flowers are just very impor- o me, so I thought I should give my opinion even if ight not agree. But I can see that you've really ht this through, so I'll get behind your choice even itially had other ideas." Then it's back to trying to mber the third and fourth lines of "Unskinny Bop" e gasoline you wanna pump me/ And leave me when et your fill, yeah").

The Invitations

about it: When you receive a wedding invitation, much attention do you pay the actual, physical piece per? When I get a wedding invitation, my thoughts immediately to the information printed thereon. "I to go where for this thing? Aww, that weekend I was ing on going dirt-biking! The hotel room costs how ? I'm gonna need to steal a homeless man's kidney to r that!" What I don't think is, "My, what wonderful stock! What perfect fonts! I've never seen such art- e of vellum in all my days! Why, I shall keep this ing invitation forevermore and hold it as the stan- against which all future invitations are measured!"

wever, that's exactly how women think. This is why mmend that you go with your fiancée to pick out in- ions. You're taking one for the team, here. You're to lose an hour of your life to this, but if you play it you'll save hundreds of dollars that can then be ap- to more worthy causes, such as adding another case uor at the reception or upgrading to the Mirrored ng Suite on your honeymoon.

re's how it'll go: She'll show you her basic choices. those choices will spiderweb into a thousand choices. Understand that invitations aren't ey affairs. You pick the font, the color of the font, the paper, the color of the paper, the envelope, the envelope lining, the reply card, the layout (vertical or horizontal) and CARMEN ELECTRA'S BOOBS. I'm sorry. I had to do that, because I know most guys stopped paying attention back at the word "font," and you need to read this. It's important.

Ahem. With all these choices, there'll be more expensive and less expensive options. Your job as a guy is to defend the cheapest route, every time, while never arguing cost as the reason. For instance, the evil and greedy invitation purveyor will say, "Now, you can go with the base paper, which is made from recycled Milwaukee's Best 30-packs. Your invitations might smell bad and possibly carry communicable diseases. Or, for a dollar more per invitation, you can upgrade to the eagle-skin parchment. It's slightly more sophisticated." This doesn't sound expensive until you add a dollar per to every aspect of the invite and suddenly find you're shelling out 10 G's for something people are going to pin on their refrigerators for a month and then throw away. So in this case, you'd reply, "Oh, honey, recycled Milwaukee's Best paper? That's so fun! All our friends will love that, and it's good for the environment. If the invitations smell bad, we can spray them with Febreze." And so on, down the line. Good luck.

aterers are all the same, basically. Thanks to your awesome open bar, your friends and family will be too buzzed to care much about the food, so let your fiancée pick out the menu and just agree with her that it's all delicious. Also, this is the only part of the wedding-planning process where you get to stuff your face and guzzle wine, so you might as well not spoil the experience by thinking too hard. There's only one question you need to ask a potential caterer: Do you offer bacon-wrapped scallops? True, bacon-wrapped scallops are pretty much the industry standard these days, but you don't want your guests to get to dessert and start wondering whether or not bacon-wrapped scallops are ever showing up. You don't want your wedding going down in history as the one that didn't provide the hors d'oeuvre of kings, the Lord's own surf-and-turf, bacon-wrapped scallops.

The Guest List

ou're going to want to defer to her on this one. (Are you noticing a trend here?) Whatever the maximum guest capacity is, you'll reach a point where you're bargaining over friends—if you're inviting your friend Cindy from your second-to-last job, then I get Cousin Ernie, the incontinent kleptomaniac, plus a guest. Since you're going to lose these battles anyway, your strategy is to use them to put money in the bank for other, more important areas. Argue convincingly, but always give in. The ultimate outcome is a win-win-win for you. First, your buddies who do make the cut will likely enjoy a more favorable ratio of single women at the reception. The guys you didn't invite won't care, because they're guys. And your bride-to-be will appreciate your compromising ways so much that you'll have added bargaining power when it comes to… the bar.

The Band

t's not that wedding bands suck, it's that wedding bands—through habit, tradition or lack of creativity—play the same old songs that everyone's heard at every other wedding. Who decided that "Celebrate" was mandatory wedding material? At my own wedding this fall, our band will not be playing what's normally considered wedding music. Their set list includes Arrested Development's "Mr. Wendell," 311's "Down," Cypress Hill's "Insane in the Membrane" and the Divinyls' "I Touch Myself." This band doesn't play "Celebrate," but they do play "Ice Ice Baby." I know what you're thinking—your great-uncle Herbert isn't going to relate to the White Stripes' "Seven Nation Army." Well, your great-uncle Herbert isn't the one getting married. Furthermore, back when he got married, he probably wanted to listen to some Buddy Holly covers, but he got stuck listening to a jug band because that's what his great-uncle liked. The outdated wedding playlist is part of a vicious cycle, and it's time it ended. It's time to "Express Yourself," which incidentally is the title of another song on my wedding setlist. And no, it's not the Madonna version—it's the NWA version, which includes such awesome lyrics as, "You ain't swift, movin' like a tortoise/ Full of rigor mortis." Sure, break it up here and there with some "Signed, Sealed, Delivered, I'm Yours" and the like, but please, make it your goal to join my cause and effect a wedding-music paradigm shift. I'm not saying you need to hire the all-dwarf Kiss tribute band MiniKiss (although if you do, can I come to your wedding?). I'm just saying that Uncle Herbert got shot down over Korea—he can deal with a little Beck.

The Bar

otice I didn't label this section "Open Bar." That's because an open bar is a given. I don't care how much it costs, I don't care if you can only pony up for a case of Chernobyl Vodka and a jug of Mr. Pibb. Because guess what? People love open bar so much that if that's all you provide, and every other drink is cash bar, you'll be overhearing the following conversation all night:

"What are you drinking?"

"Oh, I've got a vodka-Pibb. How about you?"

"Ditto."

An open bar is the engine that drives a successful reception. You don't want disgruntled guests thinking that on top of every other cost associated with a wedding, they've got to foot the bill for booze now, too. You want them to feel like VIPs. "Scotch on the rocks? Of course, sir. No, put that money away. Just take your drink, get out of here and don't come back… until you want another one!" Soon enough, that liquid exuberance will flow right out onto the dance floor, where it'll look like MTV's The Grind with more tuxes and fewer visible tattoos. After it's all over, your guests will remember what a great time they had—and what a kind and generous host you were—when they finally get around to logging onto the Crate and Barrel Web site to pick out those matching espresso machines you registered for. Money spent on an open bar, my friend, is money well spent. IB

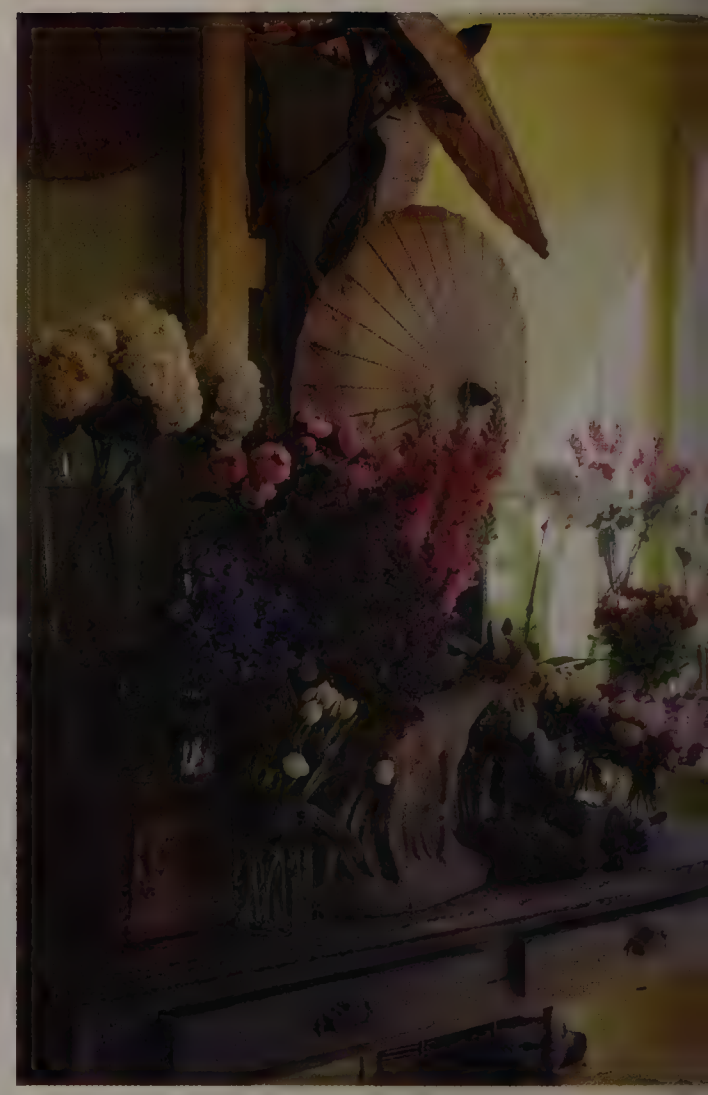
RUPTURES AND RAPTURE OF RELATIONSHIP

Former Boston Globe journalist Christina Robb's book This Changes Everything is about "the relational revolution in psychology."

Harvard psychologist Lawrence Kohlberg laid out a model of moral development that climbed upward to a somewhat icy abstraction, prescribing certain ideals. Psychologist Carol Gilligan begged to differ with this blueprint, at least regarding women, claiming they come at moral questions from a position that takes into account relations between people. Gilligan's conceptual earthquake was part of a vast movement, questioning among others Freud himself, that looked more benignly at the inner workings of women and girls, normalizing qualities once deemed deficient. How did girls find (and lose) their "voice"? If connection was the goal, how could they maintain anger as a mode of connectedness, even "a vivid form of caring," as theologian Beverly Harrison put it? Pulitzer Prize–winner Christina Robb went about absorbing in a curious, indeed relational, manner the history of various powerful feminists. Judith Herman had unearthed alarming incidences of incest and validated such trauma as similar to that of war. Jean Baker Miller posited a "New Psychology of Women," and others looked at disturbing things like eating disorders—those willful, dangerous ways some girls found to wrongheadedly cope. "Thinness has replaced virginity," says Catherine Steiner-Adair.

TRÈS BEAU, BOW STREET FLOWERS

Bow Street Flowers, specializing in weddings, is at 108 Beacon St., Somerville (617-492-0080; www.bowstreetflowers.com). Walk in for an everyday arrangement.



Here's a flower shop that has weathered the move to another great little neighborhood, maintaining its floral sophistication and European atmosphere. Real bunnies hopping through the store seem to think they're outside. Wainscoting and plastered walls in pale creamy greens, old benches and the drowsy wildness of some flowers barely tamed (with long, fuzzy stems and textured flowers from the subtly faded end of the spectrum) add to the flavor. So do birds' eggs, moss, seed pods and twiggy wreaths that echo the aesthetic. Wonderfully named flowers and bushes such as smilex and foxtail, scented geraniums, lilacs and viburnum are well represented here. Some delicate indoor topiary, green head held high, is available too. One wedding at the Fogg Museum featured loose, lush arrangements of flowers half-napping as they stretched out on the horizontal. Come in have Bow Street fill a tight, square vase that juxtaposes the surprising brightness of red and purple tu with flowers of more sober colors in arresting, short-stemmed arrangements. Bow Street, store and st feels almost outdoors.

PURSUING THE MYTHOPOETIC PATH

Rowe Camp & Conference Center (413-339-4954; www.rowecenter.org) in Rowe, Mass., offers workshops in the N Age spirit through October.

Once upon a time, hip and seekers swam in the periential rivers of Esa Joseph Campbell crac open the world of m and Robert Bly brought men's yearnings on dr ming retreats. That sp rich and thrilling, is ca "The Human Poten Movement" and is aliv Rowe. The spiritual retr catalogue, published ap priately on newspaper fers a chance, at some c roads, to have a "sabbat that ostensibly allows soul "to find new way deal with conflict, to e the mysterious realm o inner life and be tr formed." The Tuning Effect is a holistic practice of hypnotic learning to "re-tune, like an in ment, our positive states of mind and feeling." A heart-centered couples course is led by the ecs cally affectionate Joyce and Barry Vissell. The Renaissance Soul workshops offer "eye-ope metaphors and new paradigms." And Therapeutic Touch brings deepened "quietude" and an pression of timelessness to impart "verve, vigor and vitality" from one healer, profoundly still centered, to someone who's ill. It all twinkles with the spiritual, mystical and exploratory. M bears, solidarity and singing—come ye.

KITCHEN CALIENTE

Orinoco adds authentic Latin flair to the South End's culinary map.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

In the restaurant-rich South End, Shawmut Avenue isn't on the radar screen of most non-neighborhood foodies. While many Bostonians and suburbanites are well aware of the culinary treasures of Tremont Street, Columbus Avenue and, especially recently, Washington Street, Shawmut Avenue's Joe V's and Franklin Café are relatively unknown to auslanders. The fact that Shawmut Avenue is difficult to reach from downtown—you have to drive out Tremont or Washington and double back on Shawmut, which is one-way for several blocks—may have something to do with it, and the lack of parking spaces available to nonresidents compounds the problem, making the street practically terra incognita to all but the locals.

Enter Orinoco, a tiny, engaging Venezuelan eatery tucked into a storefront on the corner of Shawmut and West Concord Street. Named for a major South American river that begins near the Venezuelan-Brazilian border and flows north through Venezuela, forming part of its frontier with Columbia, this "taguarita" serves some of the most authentic, unpretentious but delicious ethnic food in the city at pocketbook-friendly prices. Its location off the beaten path serves its neighborhood constituency well, since it's very hard to score one of its 30 seats in the evening unless you arrive at 6 pm sharp, when the restaurant opens its doors for dinner.

The restaurant is furnished with wood-paneled banquettes painted a mellow green, sturdy oak tables, and colorful, whimsically mismatched chairs. More wooden paneling covers the walls beneath a high wainscoting, with clay-tile veneer above. The pressed tin ceiling resembles the upper wall paneling in its dappled clay colors. Wood-framed black-and-white photographs festoon the stretch of wall above the booths, while a small collection of Venezuelan artifacts, including three brightly painted papier-mâché masks mounted on the back wall next to the tiny open kitchen, add color. Black metal–framed lantern light fixtures hanging from the ceiling provide illumination, while recorded Latin music enlivens the warm, hospitable atmosphere of this cozy space.

Orinoco's menu offers arepas (grilled corn-pocket sandwiches resembling oversized English muffins), sopas (soups), empanadas (traditional Latin American meat and vegetable patties), salads, antojitos (appetizers), main courses, side dishes and desserts. The arepas delivered the warm, sweet flavor and substantial texture of corn to whatever filling they contained. The arepas pernil ($5.95), stuffed with slow-cooked slices of pork leg with mojo (a vibrant sauce of garlic, cilantro, oregano and lime juice) and tomato slices, proved tender, moist and flavorful. The arepas mechada ($5.95) substituted shredded beef for the pork. The coarse, pleasantly stringy texture of the beef, resembling pieces pulled from a well-done brisket, had a savory, slightly sweet and mellow flavor that was complemented by the piquant mojo.

Orinoco offered some particularly toothsome salads, the most memorable of which was remolacha con cabra ($6.75), roasted beets tossed in a sherry vinaigr with mixed greens, slender slices of s lots rendered pink from the beet ju fresh goat cheese, cherry tomatoes, w grapes and pine nuts. A colorful, va gated mélange of light, delicate and pl antly flavored greens, the salad wa once refreshing and satisfying. A complex salad accompanied the panadas ($6.95), and our waitress acc modated us by serving the salad on a s rate plate rather than underneath empanadas, to avoid making them so The empanadas themselves, two t overs made with ground plantain do and filled with wild mushrooms, M chego cheese, green chili sauce and p illo (chopped, fire-roasted red peppe were moist despite being fried to a brown. The salad accompaniment sisted of variegated greens and purple tuce in a well-balanced vinaigre Datiles ($5.25), four almond-stuffed d wrapped with bacon that had been f just short of crisp, made a splendid ap tizer, combining sweet, smoky and s flavors with luscious, soft fruits crunchy almonds. I noticed that the m includes the dates in the palmito sa which consists of endives, hearts of p and a variety of greens.

The principales (main courses) cluded a rack of lamb special ($17). small rib chops, served with mint m cooked rare as ordered and topped wi complex breading of chopped pista nuts, green plantain chips, panela cane sugar), paprika and cilantro, pr tender, delicate and mild in flav learned on a subsequent phone call to chef, Carlos Rodriguez, that Orinoco New Zealand lamb, unless a dish calls more mature and stronger, gamier tas meat, in which case Australian lam substituted. In fact, in this dish the mojo, Orinoco's signature cilantro s augmented with lime juice, peppern parsley and oregano, could've stood the gamiest of meats. The garnish, a watercress salad, came dressed with a ciously assertive vinaigrette that bined blue goat cheese, dried mushro and balsamic vinegar, which al caused me to overlook my usual aver to tough-stemmed watercress.

The ken turned out to be an entire half of nall bird, marinated in oregano, tro, vinegar, onion and garlic and roasted at a very high temperature al in the complex, herb-infused fla- and tender, succulent texture. It ged with an engaging, remarkably ious, slightly caramelized character. pabellón criollo, traditional Venez- shredded-beef stew, replicated the d beef that had filled the arepas ada. Served with white rice, black s and fried sweet plantains, the beef he same inviting, mellow sweetness distinguished the earlier dish, and component of the ensemble fit into , from the dark, protein-rich beans e white rice, in which distinct al kernels delighted with their tex- and flavor. Unfortunately, the dish ed cold at table, diminishing my en- ent of it. Orinoco's al lado (side) s included fried yucca, that ubiqui- South American root vegetable, rendered incredibly light and deli- by steaming and frying it in the ter of tempura, delivered hot and from the kitchen, with the restau- signature mojo for dipping.

inoco's postres (desserts) included llo ($4.25), Venezuelan flan with a erful smooth texture and full flavor. ker and more substantial than most ds, it profited from the layer of dark caramelized sugar on top that lent eat a mellow sweetness. Arroz con leche ($4.25), rice pudding, did not measure up to the flan, but its mellow sweetness and ample sprinkling of cinnamon made it refreshing. Best among the desserts, the torta fluida ($4.95) brought a diminutive confection made from Venezuelan dark chocolate. Deep, intensely chocolate but not bitter, its thick, buttery texture constituted a sufficient fix for the most rabid of chocoholics. Its service in a small aluminum foil cup contributed a note of authenticity at the expense of style. Unfortunately, both the flan and the chocolate cake came in portions so small that they were gone far too soon. For beverages, Orinoco offered a selection of bottled beers, including the popular Mexican brew Dos Equis and the Brazilian Brahma ($4.25 each), as well as a number of wines, including a full-bodied, well-balanced Pascual Toso cabernet sauvignon ($7.50 a glass) with robust fruit, sound structure and good acidity.

Best of all, this amiable little eatery was fun, with the host and staff—and the chef when I spoke to him by phone—evidencing an infectious enthusiasm for the pleasure they were giving patrons who had persevered to win a seat in the tiny venue. The servers on both of my visits performed admirably despite the eatery's fully occupied status. I recall with particular delight my waitress on the second night, a young woman from Mexico's Sinaloa province, which borders the Pacific, whose slightly accented English and upbeat demeanor embodied the soul of Latin hospitality. All I could think of was the classic greeting, "Mi casa es su casa." IB

Comedy: Get Jacked

As a rule, 75-year-old men aren't particularly adept at throwing us into fits of laughter—unless misplaced dentures or much-needed Depends are involved. Jackie Mason, however, is the exception to that rule, and on May 20 the legendary comedian comes to town to perform his latest show, Freshly Squeezed, at the Berklee Performance Center. After years paying his dues on the Manhattan comedy scene, Mason first hit it big in the early '60s as a regular on The Ed Sullivan Show. But a spat with Sullivan in 1962 (over an alleged profane gesture Mason made on the air) put his rise to stardom in a temporary holding pattern. For more than 20 years, Mason flew under the comic radar, until his one-man show The World According To Me hit L.A. in 1984. There it earned rave reviews, before heading to Broadway in 1986 for an unprecedented two-and-a-half-year run that earned Mason Tony and Emmy awards, as well as a Grammy nomination. Since then he's been a Broadway fixture, hitting the stage again in 1990 with Jackie Mason: Brand New, in 1994 with Jackie Mason: Politically Incorrect, in 1996 with Love Thy Neighbor, in 1999 with Much Ado About Everything, and in 2002 with Prune Danish. After that illustrious career, we'll even forgive him for Caddy Shack 2. Berklee Performance Center, 136 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-747-2261). www.ticketmaster.com. 8 pm. $55–$75. —RL

Music and CityScope: Love Thy Planet

April in Boston is cold—too cold to celebrate Earth Day with a long outdoor festival. So this year, the annual EarthFest celebration at the Hatch Shell was pushed back a few weeks. Brilliant, huh? For the festival's 13th anniversary, chances are good for seeing hippies, green activists and a rocking lineup of musicians, all in actual sunshine. Headliners include the family band Los Lonely Boys, with their Tex-Mex style of classic rock, and James Blunt, the singer/songwriter loved by women near and far for his lovelorn hit single "You're Beautiful." Also on stage: Brandi Carlile, the Fray and the Alternate Routes. The daylong event gets under way at 12 pm, and includes nearly 100 interactive booths offering displays, exhibits and food samplings. *Hatch Shell, Charles River Esplanade, Boston. www.wbos.com. 12–6 pm. Movies: Short Stuff

Not all Academy Award victories are celebrated with an onstage hug from Nicole Kidman and a cliché-filled acceptance speech, but that doesn't mean some of the "other" Oscar winners aren't praiseworthy. Every spring the Coolidge Corner Theatre honors the entries in two lesser-known categories—Best Live Action Short and Best Animated Short—with its aptly named program Academy Award–Nominated Shorts: Live Action & Animation. This one-night event features a screening of each of the 10 nominated films (five per category), including The Moon and the Son: An Imagined Conversation, the animated winner about the emotional terrain of father/so relationships, and Six Shooter, the live-action winner about an elderly man who encounters a strange youngster during a train ride through rural Ireland. Other films include Badgered, the story of a grumpy, sleep-deprived badger, and Ausreisser, abou a man confronted by the six-year-old son he never knew he had. The shorts run between four and 28 minutes long, so even those with a short attention span can sit through them. *Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. Revenge of the Art Nerd

Zwigoff and Clowes go to School.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

You can judge Art School Confidential two ways. If you match it up against 2001's Ghost World, the previous collaboration between director Terry Zwigoff and comic-book author Daniel Clowes, it suffers by comparison—not surprisingly, since Ghost World is one of the best movies of the last decade and Art School Confidential's hero, art student Jerome (Max Minghella), can't compare with Ghost World's more outspoken and amusing heroine, Enid.

Or you can match Art School Confidential against all other films, most of which it blows away without question.

It's not surprising that Art School Confidential suffers by comparison with Ghost World. While Clowes had written extensively about the Ghost World characters before their story became a movie, Art School Confidential was a little four-page feature without a plot. It was just a funny rundown of art school types and archetypal situations, some of which were used in the art-class scenes in Ghost World.

The rundown of art school types becomes one of Art School Confidential's highlights, when longtime student Bardo (Joel David Moore) clues in freshman Jerome during the pair's drawing class. Among these types are the "vegan holy man," "beatnik chick" and "angry lesbian." The introduction of the other characters around Jerome is amusing, too. His roommates include a film major (Ethan Suplee) who tries desperately to act like an indie-film player and an obviously gay fashion major (Nick Swardson) who's only just beginning to realize he's gay; among his teachers are a somewhat creepy painter (John Malkovich, one of the movie's producers) and a dissipated artist (Jack Ong) who just doesn't care anymore.

When Bardo discovers Jerome is still a virgin, he tries to set him up with emotionally needy female students (a brief glimpse of Jerome with "beatnik chick," who turns out to be ragingly manic-depressive, is a riot). But Jerome has his sights on Audrey (Sophia Myles), the blonde beauty he's seen eating in the cafeteria, pictured on the school brochure and (gasp for Jerome) posing nude in his drawing class.

Jerome pursues Audrey with some success, while trying to figure out just what being an artist means to him: Getting a show? Becoming rich and famous? Getting laid? Expressing himself? Pursuit of Audrey and art become entwined in Jerome's mind, and an adversary arises in Jonah (Matt Keeslar), whose boyish, primitive paintings are loved by everyone (except Jerome). Jonah's admirers include Audrey, who pushes Jerome away to be with him. Hurt, directionless Jerome takes to hanging out with Jimmy (Jim Broadbent), an art school grad who never made it and is now a bitter alcoholic (a relationship slightly reminiscent of Enid's and Seymour's in Ghost World).

And although the stew of art, libido and fame comes together with a heap of amusing irony in the climax of Art School Confidential, the story arc about a young man who wants to be rich and famous and get the girl is fairly conventional. It's as if having two women at the heart of Ghost World freed Clowes and Zwigoff to dig deeper into how their characters tried to fit into the world, while Art School Confidential deals with more mundane issues. No doubt reflecting on their own struggles as unusual, art-minded young men, the desire to connect with the opposite sex became central to the movie. But how many movies about an 18-year-old guy aren't about him trying to nail his dream girl? Not many, and not Art School Confidential. (There's also something wrong with a movie that casts Anjelica Huston and uses her only for two inconsequential scenes.)

Art student Jerome (Max Minghella) pursues his model woman, Audrey (Sophia Myles).

So Jerome may not be some feel-good Tom Cruise alpha male, but he's not all that different from your average young hero (the long-forgotten John Cusack–Demi Moore comedy One Crazy Summer is another good version of a similar sort of story, and the movie is not very far from TV's late, great Undeclared). Art School Confidential also naturally suffers from comparison with Zwigoff's previous work. His others—the documentaries Louie Bluie (still not on DVD) and Crumb, the features Ghost World and Bad Santa—are all one-of-a-kind movies that influenced later films.

While funny and irreverent, Art School Confidential doesn't blaze any trails. And after a year-long delay caused by the sale of United Artists (where the movie was made) to Sony (who's releasing it), its arrival is almost anticlimactic. But, hey, I'm not complaining. Any way you look at it, Art School Confidential is one of the few good American movies to come out so far this year. IB friends, the title refers to one (played by Jennifer Aniston) being single and struggling in life, financially and figuratively, while the others (including characters played by Frances McDormand, Joan Cusack, Jason Isaacs and Holofcener regular Catherine Keener) are all well-off (financially, at least) and married. On a wider level, though, the comedy is about entering middle age and dealing with diminished expectations and the person you're trying to spend the rest of your life with. Nothing groundbreaking occurs, but everything here is appealing: the smart script, the experienced cast sharing the load, the unpretentious approach and the effective comedy about everyday life. (At Kendall Square and suburbs.)

The Notorious Bettie Page ★★

The Proposition ★★★
The struggle to tame the lawless 19th-century frontier—a staple of American Westerns—is dramatically transplanted to Australia in this Nick Cave–written drama. On the law side are Englishmen such as a hard-nosed military officer (Ray Winstone) trying to "civilize" a remote area and the colonial bureaucrat (David Wenham) who tries to boss him around. On the criminal side are the Burns brothers, who've just brutally murdered an English family. The movie opens on a raid in which Winstone's men capture two of the brothers, and the titular proposition is made: If Charlie (Guy Pearce) will kill Arthur (Danny Huston), the brother who's become a sort of mountain man far from the law's reach, then the police won't hang the youngest, weakest brother (Richard Wilson). Although it'd be nice to learn what motivated the brothers' original attack, class conflict charges the entire story, whether it's between the English and the Irish or the English and the aboriginals. And the well-acted movie sustains its wonderfully grimy intensity all the way to the bloody end. (Opens May 26 at Kendall Square.)

Spirit of the Beehive ★★★
Reissued in advance of a presumed U.S. DVD release, Victor Erice's moody, mesmerizing 1973 Spanish drama is set in a remote village in 1940, after the fascist victory in the Spanish Civil War. There, an impressionable girl (Ana Torrent) and her big sister (Isabel Telleria) go to a traveling movie show and see Frankenstein, and the younger girl becomes obsessed with the monster, believing she can find it (and thinking she does when she befriends a fugitive hiding out near the village). The movie isn't just a testament to the emotional power of movies, it's also among the best screen stories shown through a child's eyes. The adult action can be a little thick, but Torrent, with her dark, soulful peepers, makes an engaging heroine, and we're with her the whole way. (At the Museum of Fine Arts, May 25, 27-28.)

Thank You for Smoking ★★★½
The flexible morals of Nick Naylor (Aaron Eckhart), the conscience-free spokesman for the tobacco industry, are the source of much comedy in this feature debut of writer-director Jason Reitman. Nick is an entertaining creep, and a regular highlight here are his weekly lunches with the gun-industry flack (David Koechner) and the alcohol-industry flack (Maria Bello), in which the trio essentially play games of "my ethical blind spot is bigger than yours." The movie might've been enjoyable enough if it had been just about Nick, but its larger snapshot of the nation is where it gains strength. Reitman, adapting Christopher Buckley's novel, builds the comedy into a Wag the Dog–style spoof of how much we've become a culture of spin, half-truths and forces seeking to distract us from life's realities. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton.)

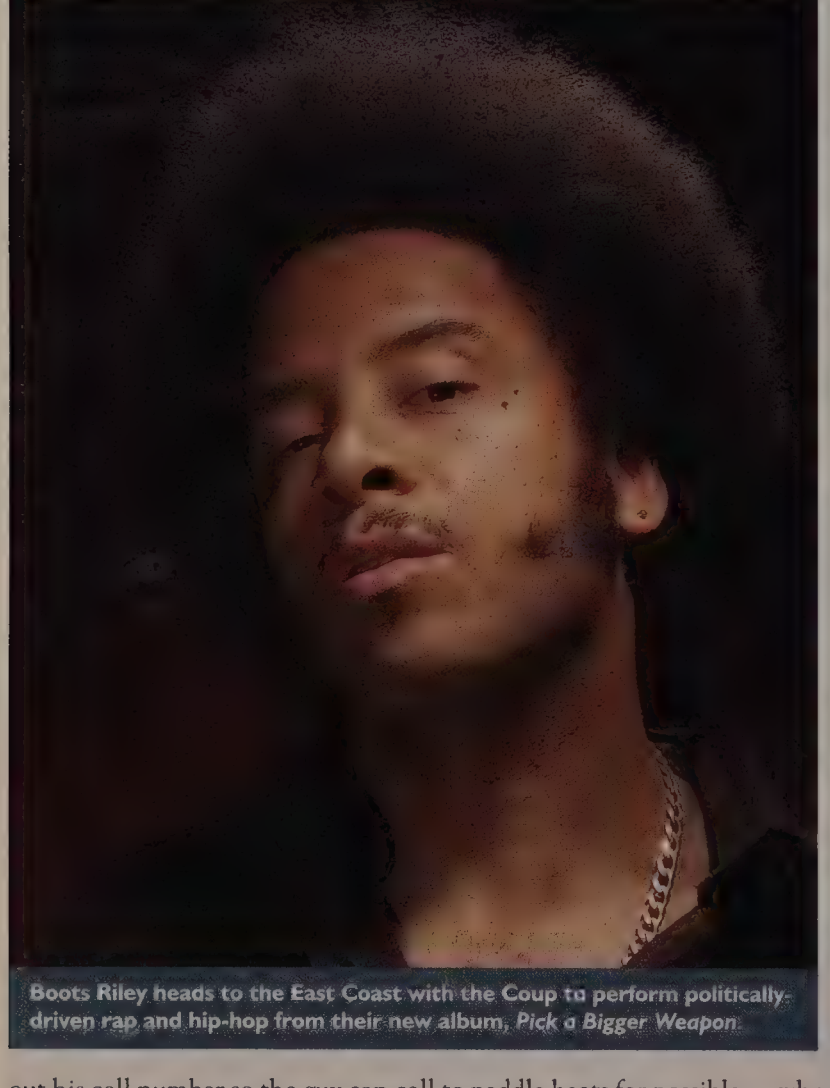
BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Hey, you're the Coup!" A man interrupts Boots Riley as the frontman of that funky, radical hip-hop group runs errands in his Oakland neighborhood during a cell phone interview. In the brief exchange that follows, Riley not only plugs the Coup's new album Pick a Bigger Weapon, but gives out his cell number so the guy can call to peddle beats for possible (even if unlikely) use on a future record.



Boots Riley heads to the East Coast with the Coup to perform politically-driven rap and hip-hop from their new album, Pick a Bigger Weapon.

Such is life for a critically lauded rapper-producer with the grassroots savvy to complement his signature sideburns and Afro. "People don't necessarily know me as Boots, but that's cool," he says. "I've probably had the same hair since fourth grade. I'm very recognizable even if people haven't bought the album: 'Oh, it's that guy!'"

Riley takes recognition as it comes. The Coup's 2001 album Party Music rode high on year-end critics' polls only after controversy over original cover art depicting Riley and DJ Pam the Funkstress blowing up the World Trade Center with musical equipment. Designed months before the terrorist attacks with the concept of protesting capitalism, the cover was changed before the record's fall release.

"That did a good thing, because a lot of reviewers had never really tripped off the Coup," Riley says. "Because of the cover, they said, 'Let's see what they're talking about.'"

The music does the talking on Pick a Bigger Weapon. "It means 'up the ante' or take the fight to the next level," he says, adding that the title came from a dinner where his girlfriend kept ordering martinis. "The idea is that people drink to run away from their problems," says Riley, so a friend at dinner piped, "C'mon girl, pick a bigger weapon."

Yet apart from "Head (of State)," a crude metaphor for a once-cozy relationship between Saddam Hussein and another President Bush, the new CD shies from too-obvious assaults. "Captain Sterling's Little Problem," about soldier rebellion in Vietnam, transfers to Iraq with lines like "You brought us to this country not to free but body-bag them."

"It took me a while to figure out where I was coming from [on this record], because everybody wanted it to handle all the giant political questions of the world because we set that up for ourselves," Riley says. "But, I realized that most of my stuff is talking about the micropolitical."

To that end, much of the disc (which includes cameos from rappers Black Thought and Talib Kweli and Audioslave guitarist Tom Morello) focuses on people's socio-economic struggles. "It's the ruling class that dictates what goes on at the political level and breaks down to our everyday existence," says Riley, who brings a "really tight live band" with Pam the Funkstress to the Paradise June 7.

Not that Riley's smartly honed rhymes lack hope and humor. His sly subjects and wordplay nod to Prince and P-Funk in addition to musical influences Sly Stone, Gil Scott Heron and Stevie Wonder. The new CD even includes soulful bedroom ballads, albeit with titles like "BabyLet'sHaveABabyBeforeBushDoSomethin'Crazy."

"There's a lot of art that's supposedly political that's very gloom and doom, and I'm really not," he says. "You have to have some kind of hope in order to be inviting."

"You can't get somebody to join the revolution if you can't sit down at a bar and have a drink with them," says Riley, 35. "I got involved in organizing when I was 14 and someone pulled in front of my house with a van full of girls my age and said, 'We're going to the beach, but first we're going to support the cannery strike in Watsonville.' I jumped into the van for the girls and came out a revolutionary."

"I deal with emotions, so even when I talk about the broader issues, I have to bring it home," says the rapper, who took early cues from his activist parents. "My parents used to have a lot of parties with dancing and music and card-playing. I found out later those were community meetings that just turned into a card game."

His hip-hop aspirations were fueled by an alleged incident of police brutality where a woman and her sons were beaten and a crowd forced the officers from the neighborhood, after initially being dispersed by shots in the air.

"Everybody told the story and a lot of the pieces would be different," he says. "But one part that was always the same no matter who told it—whether it was an old lady or a teenager—was that when everybody was running, somebody in the crowd started chanting, 'Fight the power!'

"This was the summer of '89, and Public Enemy's 'Fight the Power' was all over the radio," Riley says. "[The crowd] knew that this was the right thing to do. So it told me what hip-hop can do—it could be that rallying cry." IB plays June 7 at the Paradise Rock Club.

Swinging at Symphony Hall

The Boston Pops hosts its inaugural Jazz Festival.

Monheit performs for two nights with the Boston Pops

The Boston Pops, which never met a musical form it didn't like, launches its first-ever Jazz Fe on May 23. The weeklong event features three evenings with veteran guitarist and cal list John Pizzarelli, and two nights with versatile rising star Jane Monheit. Pops music di ctor Keith Lockhart will conduct all the concerts. The evenings also feature pre- and po -concert performances by students from the Berklee College of Music in a low-key se ing beginning at 6 pm.

Pizzarelli, son of jazz guitarist Bucky Pizzarelli, defines "smooth." Although he's been re rding and performing for more than two decades, with dozens of disks to his credit, he perhaps most recognizable for his spot in the Foxwoods Resort commercial, singing hi une "The Wonder of It All." Since 1982 he's fronted the John Pizzarelli Trio, which in ides his brother Martin on bass and pianist Ray Kennedy.

Monheit can croon like Ella Fitzgerald and scat like Betty Carter, but she's most ad ired for her vocal restraint—an admirable trait for someone with the sonic firepower sh has. Laid-back and sensuous, her 2000 debut, Never Never Land, stayed on the charts on more than a year and was voted Best Debut by the Jazz Journalists Association. Her ne t recent recording, last December's The Season, proves that even Christmas songs ca sound sexy.

Tickets for all performances ($17–$74) are available at the box office, by calling 617-266-21 or by visiting www.bostonpops.org (there's a $5 surcharge for ordering online). Symphony Hall, 301 Mass. Ave., Boston (617-638-9280). —Keith Powers

I never thought it could happen to me.

As a lifelong bicyclist, I have participated in many bicycling events for worthwhile causes. I even got to ride with Lance Armstrong, Eric Heiden, and Greg LeMond.

Then on my 45th birthday, I got the news,"You have multiple sclerosis."

Like many people newly diagnosed, I did not know what to do or what to think. So I contacted the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. I got the information and care resources I needed.

I learned that the Society shares my passion for bicycling. Last year, I formed a team and rode the Great Mass Getaway MS 150 Bike Tour. Together we raised over $12,000 to help support other people like me and their families.

IMMORTAL IMPERSONAL

Day-Tripper

Don't buy into the stereotype that Bostonians are unfriendly and rude. On Monday, May 1, I tripped in a pothole on Beacon Street by Movie Works in Brookline. And I want to express my gratitude to the three people (two women and a man) who came to my rescue. Together, they called for a cab and the man very generously gave me money for the cab ride (and wouldn't give his name or address so I could repay him). They then waited and saw me off to Beth Israel Emergency room. It was only a level two sprain and I was sent home with an air cast and crutches. The lesson that I took away from this experience is that it's OK to let people help you! Thank You!

—Healed and Humbled

Good Karma

To the girl in the silver car with New Hampshire plates who I more than bumped into with my car, I was having the most stressful day. I just wanted to be home when I rear-ended you. You were so kind and forgiving when you could've been really angry. You even complimented my skirt as you were leaving. The world needs more people like you! Thank you for making my terrible day a little better. I hope that you are forever treated with the same compassion you showed me.

—Teal Car, Mass. Plates

Bad Karma

It was Friday, May 5, in Somerville. I was approaching Winter Hill and running late. Three people had already cut me off, and a woman stopped short and parked her car in the middle of my lane. Frustrated, I quickly merged into your lane. You beeped and threw your hands all around. I could see you were yelling in my rearview mirror. I couldn't understand why you'd be so upset, until I noticed that the flag on your car was not the American Flag, but rather, one of a funeral procession. I'm so sorry for flipping you off. (I'm not even the type to flip people off!) Once I realized, I put my hand up as an apology, but I'm sure it didn't do. I truly apologize for causing further stress on a day that was already hard enough for you to begin with. I feel terrible and am embarrassed for my actions and sorry for your loss.

To my mysterious tote-bag Samaritan, you returned my grad school paperwork, my library books and my favorite tote. You saved me from the wrath of the Boston Public Library and ages of paperwork recovery. Yet, you left no note and I don't know how to thank you. Maybe you live on my street and found it on your way home. Maybe you're a tourist who used Google Maps to find me! I'll never know. Instead, I just hope you know how kick-ass you are for bringing all that stuff back to me.

—Glad Grad

Mute Commute

To the people on the Franklin commuter rail line who talk on their cell phones to the people they are already going home to: Shut up! I do not care if you miss your boyfriend or you're going home for the weekend after being in the dorms all week. If you haven't cooked dinner yet, wait 10 minutes till you get home. Does your wife really need to start boiling the water now? And do I have to hear it? All I'm saying is the commuter rail is expensive for convenience's sake, and it's inconvenient for me to have to listen to you blabber on your journey home everyday. Maybe you should sit down and enjoy a little peace and quiet at the end of the day while you ride the train. I sure can't when I have to listen to all of your stories.

—Ticked En Route

Strings Attached

To the Berklee musician on the D Green Line, I had my violin and you had your guitar as we made room for people to get on the already crowded train. We locked eyes and I heard the rhythms of your Spanish guitar in my heart. Although we didn't speak, your lips sang to me, while we listened to the busy lull of the subway as everyone else was tuning out the world with their iPods. If you remember this, please contact me so that we might perform sweet symphonies alone.

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Consumed as you may be with the petty concerns of domestic life, now would be a good time to bury your cares and woes in the garden or swat them out of the ballpark. While the earthy Taurus sun and Mercury powwow in your house of recreation and other pleasurable pastimes, make sure this opportunity to really enjoy yourself doesn't pass you by. Also know that Neptune going retrograde in your Aquarius money house will shift long-standing financial matters to the back burner for the summer. New ones may get postponed as well.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

Spread the word. For the next 10 days, Mercury is busy making calls and sending e-mails, so avail yourself of its ties to every other sign (except Libra) and let those folks know what you need. Having hazy Neptune in Aquarius for so many years may have made it difficult to come across loud and clear, but since Neptune is about to take its summer sabbatical, its influence on you and the image you project will decrease. Besides, solar Gemini is right around the corner, and we're all familiar with the buzz that air sign emits.

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

It's happened every year of your life, so by now no doubt you've made various accommodations to your Neptune ruler's annual change of direction. But if you need a heads-up, here it is: Neptune performs its backflip on May 22 and faces forward again just before Halloween. Most signs don't notice the impact the outer planets have on them, but because you're a supersensitive Fish, attuned to the ebb and flow of the waters of life, you may realize that something infinitely subtle is happening. Will it affect your love life?

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Follow a hunch or handle a current financial matter logically? It's a toss-up. While informative Mercury in your Taurus house of assets merges with the sun, you could be as smart about money as you'll need to be all year long. However, their meeting also suggests that your cosmic economic adviser is sending a message via a gut feeling or a voice in your head. That shouldn't be ignored. Meanwhile, magnetic Venus, your sign is attracting more attention than even you're used to. A distraction now, a disruption next week.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Check the facts before you proceed any further. As the Taurus sun and Mercury approach their annual meeting on the 18th, you might need to have more papers in hand than a few birthday cards. And since both heavenly bodies are headed for your Gemini money house, it makes sense to double-check the numbers as well. Career matters could take a backseat as imaginative Neptune in your midheaven turns retrograde for the next five months. Consider the retrogression permission to cruise through the summer, not to abandon ship.

BOSTON REALLY IS THE ATHENS OF AMERICA!

Why run 26 miles when you can watch other people doing it from a rooftop with an incomparable view of the finish line, a buffet of delicious food from here to Hopkinton, and free-flowing booze, all while benefiting the American Stroke Association?

That was the rationale behind the Lenox Hotel's Marathon Party, which drew the likes of Patriots hero Tedy Bruschi and his babe-a-licious wife, Heidi, celebrity chef Robert Fathman, the hospitable Saunders clan (who own the hotel)—including Roger, Gary, Jeff, Tedd, Todd, Debra and Keko (Tedd's dog, whom someone joked was picking up the tab for the party)—publishing moguls Gen Tracey and David Jacobs, weatherman Dick Albert, empress of all radio Julie Kahn, future shipping magnate Philip Alden Wilde IV and his stunning sister, Carolyn, the delicious Susan and Jennifer Berkowitz, and so on and so forth.

Aside from watching the runners and stuffing their gullets, guests could take advantage of a massage therapist (partying can be stressful!), have their caricatures drawn, and otherwise chill before taking the elevator back down to the first floor and back into a city that, as one guest put it, "is full of people walking funny, wrapped in tin foil and getting applauded by people who are drunk."

GETTIN' BIZET WID IT...

The place looked like a million bucks, the guests looked like a million bucks and they raised more than a million bucks at the Carmen Ball, a fundraiser for Boston Ballet, held at the Cyclorama.

The normally cavernous space was dominated by a large square that served as the stage/dance floor, with four long runways running off of it, their edges set for dinner with roses and red tableware.

Cocktails were followed by dinner, a live auction, where large sums of money were bandied about, and a performance by dancers who could crack a walnut with their buttcheeks, after which the somewhat less accomplished but no less enthusiastic guests crowded the dance floor.

Present and accounted for: cochairs Anna Levitan, Audrey Reny and Pixley Schiciano (who has the coolest name ever), Wonder Woman Lisa Pierpont and the lovably offbeat Alex, Back Bay nabobs Ofer and Shelly Nemirovsky and Jeryl and Steve Oristaglio, the surpassingly glamorous Molly Schoeck (who deserved best-dressed honors), and one person who said to a friend, "You didn't tell me you were wearing a tiara," to which she replied, "I prefer to think of it as a headband made of diamonds."

A close tie in the arch remarks category: someone said, "I love talking to your husband," to which his wife replied, "Oh, good. I'll leave him with you until it's time to go home."

At the Carmen Ball, top row: Pixley Schiciano; Audrey and Steve Reny. Bottom row: Krystina Hare Lyons; dinner and the dance floor

NAH, HE'S STILL UNDER CONTRACT TO GRAPE-NUTS AND LIBERTY MEDICAL...

Next year, I'm wearing sunglasses to the Huntington Theater's Spotlight Spectacular! gala at the Westin Hotel, and that has as much to do with how cool the evening is as it does with the dramatic and occasionally blinding lighting.

A long and boisterous cocktail hour featuring hors d'ouevres to die for was followed by dinner and Tony award–caliber entertainment, not to mention the gratifying sight of one rich person, who will remain nameless, bidding $11,000 on a necklace by Rosalina featuring a whopping big citrine, cognac diamonds, white diamonds and yellow sapphires set in gold.

And all this on a Monday night.

Present and accounted for: cochairs Linda and Dan Waintrup, arts patrons Christopher Yens and Temple Gill, music business legend Oedipus with choreographer Honey Blonder, the couldn't-be-any-blonder Susan Spooner with her raconteur husband, John, and the second (and soon-to-be-ex) Mrs. Staples Dola Stemberg.

It was a scintillating evening, to say the least, and certainly better than the other event taking place in the hotel: The Comprehensive Review of Gastroenterology Reception. As someone pointed out, "Who would their celebrity guest be? Wilford Brimley?"

WHAT WOULD THE MAD HATTER AND MARCH HARE HAVE TO SAY?...

It's not often you get an invitation to a 4 pm tea where everyone's drinking beer and wine.

The One Family Scholars Tea was held at the Park Plaza to celebrate the innovative educational program aimed at eradicating family homelessness, and it attracted the likes of the Fireman family (of all those Reebok millions), who started the organization—Paul, Phyllis, Dan, and son-in-law Adam Rogers (an eye surgeon)—sexy physician Dr. Caroline Baumal, Sister Margaret Leonard of Project Hope, our current lieutenant governor Kerry Healey (who shares a big pile of money with her husband), lieutenant governor hopeful Deborah Goldberg (whose big pile of money comes from being the Stop & Shop heiress), executrix and up Marjorie Clapprood, auto gazil aire Ernie Boch Jr., and anchor vi Susan Wornick and Liz Walker, joked, "I always wondered what rich ple do in the afternoon, and this be it!"

It was a bit of welcome comic relie lowing some deeply moving testimo by women who've overcome tremen adversity, and everyone left feeling and fuzzy... at least until they walked side to deal with rush hour. IB

Two Of The World's Most Demanding Chefs Agree On One Rare Ingredient.

Any recipe is only as good as its components. Trouble is, whether it's black truffles from the Perigord region of France, pure saffron from Spain, or Black Seal Rum from Bermuda, the special ingredients aren't often easily found. But are always easily worth the effort.

Tom Colicchio

Tom Colicchio, Chef/Owner Gramercy Tavern & Craft Restaurants, cookbook author and winner James Beard's Best Chef New York Award. "My first introduction to Gosling's Black Seal was on vacation in Bermuda. It was love at first sip. It brings an earthy, smooth flavor to my Bermuda Onion Soup that is missing with many rums."

Ming Tsai

Ming Tsai, Chef/Owner Blue Ginger Restaurant, cookbook author, and Emmy-winning TV host, currently of "Simply Ming" and "Ming's Quest". "We must use the best there is, no matter how hard to find. Like rich, intricate Black Seal Rum. It makes any dish really sing, including our Blue Ginger Shrimp Tempura with Gosling's Black Seal Aioli."

Black Seal Rum is made slowly, deliberately, according to family methods that are wonderfully out of date with today's mass produced brands. Perhaps this is why it won the coveted Platinum award at the World Spirits Championships. And why you'll find it the most delicious rum you've ever sipped, mixed or cooked with.

Assuming, of course, that you can find it.

PLAY DAYS

Like a smart performer, our brief New England summer always leaves us wanting a little more. So it's a good move to revel in the warm weather while it's in town. In our annual summer fun issue, we offer ideas for celebrating the season.

Music under the stars is a must for summer, and writers Paul Robicheau and Keith Powers present their top outdoor concert picks, from rock to classical. Regina Cole offers a look at antiques shopping and flea markets perfect for a weekend afternoon drive. And in "A Gal's Guide to Fenway," the anonymous G&R go undercover for us once again to explore Fenway's attractions for females (not the least of which, they note, is a surfeit of men). Finally, Hillary Geronemus takes you inside a Nantucket restaurant's kitchen as two talented chefs, hired to overhaul the place, get ready for the high season. If you visit the island this summer, stop in to see how their story turned out.

STRUCTURAL DEFECTS

Am I the only one who's noticed that in almost every restaurant review, your writer invariably says the wine has a "decent structure," a "balanced structure," or some other kind of structure? There's a big world of words out there, especially to describe wine. Please ban that word in his reviews. Or, if you want to be nice about it, I suggest you give him a wine-tasting wheel, which will open the doors to a whole new world of terminology.

MIS-PLACED

During my four years in Boston, I don't think I've ever missed an issue of THE IMPROPER. I like your magazine, but I do get disgruntled once in a while. In your recent restaurant review of Orinoco (May 17), I was appalled to see Colombia spelled incorrectly. I see this mistake over and over again in coffeehouses and other places. Stop using spellcheck and get some people working there that know the proper spelling of countries.

DYER DIE-HARD

Ezra's column is such great comic relief for me when I'm on the T. His articles are always on the money. I'm probably one of the few guys who admits to reading THE IMPROPER religiously, but the magazine does help to find the hottest events in Boston. Keep the articles coming.

The boutique

Sneaky Boutique

Japanese fashion designer Nigo is famous for his philosophy that less is more: Rather than flood the market with his product, Nigo's tactic has been to produce a limited amount of his high-end clothing and sneakers, keeping them in demand. Nigo's Bathing Ape (or BAPE) line is so popular that people line up for hours outside his well-hidden shops around Tokyo.

The same idea has helped inspire one of Boston's most unique new boutiques: Bodega, a retail/concept store run by local entrepreneur Jay Gordon and his partners, Oliver Mak (aka DJ GucciVuitton) and Dan Natola. Their joint is part homage to sneaker culture, part hipster-tipster, and part bodega—a fully functional convenience store offering items like cold soda, snacks and an array of knickknacks.

First-time visitors won't know quite what to expect (and we're not about to reveal any secrets), but you'd be forgiven for thinking, on entering the signless store, that you got the address wrong. While the timid may retreat outside to check their maps, the bold will press onward to find a high-end streetwear/sneaker boutique.

The secret-boutique phenomenon isn't new to American shores: New York got in on the ground floor (or, in the case of the camouflaged sneaker spot Nom De Guerre, below-ground floor). As at that ultra-hip NYC shop, Bodega's secrets aren't apparent to passers-by. And even though it's been open only a few weeks, it's drawn hordes of customers via word-of-mouth (or word-of-Internet).

Attracting in-the-know customers is part of the point of the place: to foster an awareness and excitement in Boston for the urban streetwear fashion culture.

There's more here than just the desirable BAPE Sta kicks and clothing. Brands like 10 Deep, Nomas, Dr. Roman and Mischka are also represented. And up-and-coming artists will be, too, since Bodega's retail space doubles as a gallery. But this isn't art you'll find on Newbury Street. The first exhibition, opening in July, will showcase the work of NYC's Desa, aka the "million-dollar vandal." So swing by the next time you need Doritos and batteries; you'll be surprised at what you discover. 6 Clearway St., Boston. www.bdgastore.com. Daily, 11 am–6 pm; open later on Fridays. —EG

Won't You Be My Neighbor... First it was Trio, then (very briefly) it was Club 180. And now 180 Lincoln St. has new owners and a new name: The District. In his most recent venture into restaurant/lounge ownership, Shahrokh Reza, with his business partner, Igor Blatnik (who owns 33 Restaurant & Lounge), has created a spot they hope will serve multiple purposes: The Financial District set can grab a quick lunch; the after-work crowd can relax and munch on "upscale comfort food"; and late-night loungers can soak up the music and atmosphere until 2 am. "The look is upscale, but the vibe isn't," Reza says of the new spot, which he hopes will become a Leather District hangout. The interior has a simple, black-and-white color scheme with funky touches like floor-to-ceiling birch trees lining the walls and a huge floral-print mural, and menu specialties include shrimp tempura and tuna sashimi. The District opens to the public June 15. 180 Lincoln St., Boston (617-426-0180). www.districtboston.com.

Wear and Flair... Who says Bostonians don't have fashion sense? Stylist Gary Croteau, manager of Mario Russo's salon at Louis Boston, has disproved the stereotype. The Northeast winner of Esquire magazine's Best Dressed Man award, he's helping put Boston on the fashion-forward map. After a coworker convinced him to apply, he met with Esquire editors and fashion experts and was chosen as one of the 10 best-dressed men in America. He'll soon find out if he makes the top five, which would mean a trip to NYC to be photographed for the mag's September issue. His approach to fashion? "Modern, original and cutting-edge," he says.

Lost and Found... A group of Brookline police officers grew tired of bringing in lost or stolen property, only to see the goods sit in storage for years. "It's insane what's out there and is never retrieved," says officer Tom Shea. So they decided to start www.juststolen.net, a Web site where consumers can register their g in case they go missing, and police departments world-wid log on. Users submit a description of the item, as well as ide ing info (including photos and serial numbers), an e-mail ad and their zip code. In return, they get an ID number that the later use to report the item as lost or stolen. You can register thing, from iPods and cameras, to cars, jewelry and heirlo Eventually the site's managers hope to make a profit, but for it's free. www.juststolen.net.

When Lululemon's new Back Bay showroom opened on a Saturday morning in May, nearly 30 women were already lined up outside, eager to start their shopping. Why the frenzy? For one thing, there's the heretofore limited access: In order to peruse Lulu's full line of yoga wear, you've got to shop at one of its 30-odd boutiques, most of which are in Canada. Also, the stuff is super cute: It's all designed to double as going-out clothes, so you can meet up with friends before or after yoga without looking like a schlub.

Lots of the tops and pants ($44–$84) are reversible, and some pants come with colorful, flowy belts. TASTY TIDBITS

Pho Real

Jacked Up... It may be months from opening, but there's already a buzz surrounding The Beehive. Now that Pho Republique is firmly established, restaurateur Jack Bardy is ready for his next South End venture, a new restaurant/bar in the space underneath the Boston Center for the Arts on Tremont Street. Set to open this fall, The Beehive is named after La Ruche, a 1920s Parisian artists' complex. The food here will be American, though, with dishes like fish tacos, steaks and rotisserie chicken. Formerly an artists' studio, the space will feature work by local artists and host lots of live jazz.

Lunching at Lineage... Having spent five months getting his new restaurant, Lineage, off the ground in Brookline, chef Jeremy Sewall is ready for some lunch. Sewall recently revealed his spring lunch menu, featuring salads and sandwiches like the roasted-beet salad with goat cheese croquet and a toasted ham-and-cheese sandwich, as well as a selection of lighter entrées like seared scallops with garlic risotto and penne with chorizo shrimp and oregano. The restaurant is also available for private luncheons, where Sewall can customize a menu for up to 50 guests. *242 Harvard St., Brookline (617-232-0065). www.lineagerestaurant.com. Fo' Shizzle, My Fizzle... The Westin Copley Place has added a little pop to its lobby with the opening of Fizz, a new champagne and white wine bar. The bar features spacious coffee tables surrounded by large couches and lounge chairs, where guests can enjoy a diverse selection of champagnes and white wines (all kept cold in a glass bowl filled with shaved ice), and an upscale bar-bites menu that features dishes like crab cakes, roasted sea scallops and tasty dessert options. Adding to the laid-back atmosphere are a fireplace, dim lighting and soft music that make it a viable date option. And if whites and champagne aren't your thing, don't worry; Fizz also offers select reds and ports for your quaffing pleasure. 10 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-262-9600).

Super Sauce... Anyone who spends her life looking for ways to make dessert taste better deserves special recognition in these pages. This issue's props go to gourmet dessert-sauce creator Cory Clarke, a Brookline native who's been serving up her Shootflying Hill sauces since late 2003. In recent months she's become more visible on the local scene with her Milk Chocolate and Dark Chocolate Lover's Sauces, which are now available at places like South End Formaggio, Savenor's and Lionette's Market on Tremont Street. And this summer looks to be an active one for Clarke, as she anticipates the release of new caramel and Mexican sauces, plus a line of peach bourbon sauces, all of which should be available at her growing list of purveyors like Pemberton Farms in Cambridge and Foodies Urban Market in Boston. www.dessertsauce.com. —RL

BACHELOR HEARTY

Despite my friends' efforts, I'll be alive for my wedding.

Bachelor parties are like New Year's Eve parties—there's just no way for the event itself to live up to the hype preceding it. You go into a bachelor party expecting absolutely demented things to happen in the course of the Wildest Night Ever, and most of the time the night boils down to getting drunk with some buddies, possibly in the company of ladies named Desire and Sindee. Not that there's anything wrong with that, but the only bachelor party that ever really lived up to the legend was my buddy Wilson's, which was—hold on, a rock just crashed through my window with a note attached: "Write any more and you'll die." And here I thought Wilson was joking about hiring thugs to follow me around and prevent me from ever writing about his bachelor party.

So let's talk about my bachelor party. It happened in Vegas. What happens in Vegas, stays in Vegas, right? Well, the only things that stayed in Vegas are my driver's license and debit card, at the Callaway Golf Center. I left the two most crucial items in my wallet at the rental-clubs desk. (Fortunately, it turns out you can get on a plane, at least in Vegas, with no photo ID.) I guess I got distracted after my buddy Scott hit a hole-in-one, and I celebrated by stealing his cell phone and texting his mother the succinct, three-word Mother's Day greeting, "Mom, I'm gay." He was mystified, for at least five seconds, why his mom would send him a reply message reading, "You mean carefree and lighthearted?"

Here's the main difference between male and female bachelor parties in Vegas: Women dabble in gambling, but are mostly about going out to clubs and having drinks bought for them by guys. For men in Vegas, casual social interaction with the opposite sex is roughly eighth on the priority list, after drinking, gambling, golf, strip clubs, floating in the Lazy River, playing video games at ESPN Zone and looking at lions. In fact, I have no idea who's buying drinks for the ladies. Possibly Europeans.

It sure wasn't a certain friend we'll call "Jack." Jack and another friend of ours, "Jimmy," sat down at a blackjack table in the Monte Carlo and didn't move for eight and a half hours. I don't know whether Jack won or lost, but I do know the pit boss eventually gave him a comp buffet dinner and a gambling addiction brochure titled "When the Fun Stops." Strangely, Jimmy didn't get the brochure, even though he sat next to Jack the entire time. I guess he didn't have that same look in his eyes.

The rest of the weekend is a blur o tinctly Vegas scenes and images: W else do you see a 400-pound lady b pool reading Penthouse? Where else d get a TV running a continuous loo porn on a shuttle bus? OK, so that wa Cheetah's shuttle bus. But where el strip clubs run shuttle buses?

I think we did justice to the Vegas b lor party. One of my friends had makeu plied to his face by a random woman o the hotel elevators at 4 am. Whits tol woman that he was a taxidermist, ges to his arms and explained, "I stuffed pythons." I won a $250 pot in the p room when I went all in and beat a p aces with triple sevens on the river. N wore a giant foam cowboy hat almost e where, including the airport; his bar t one place identified him as "Big Hat." got sick on Saturday night—as in, I wa ing the onset of what turned out to week of the flu—and Scott forced n

LITTLE BIG MAN

Doug Flutie wasn't built for football. That's what made him so great.

When you start waxing poetic about Doug Flutie's achievements over the past 25 years, the numbers that stick out to me are these: 5'9", 178 pounds. I know dishwashers, bellhops and sportscasters bigger than that. Flutie's stature wouldn't make him an imposing figure on a high school team or a D-1 college program, never mind the toughest professional league in the world, the NFL. But as Bill Belichick recently put it so succinctly, Flutie always found a way.

To illustrate that point, here's another number that'll blow your mind: Flutie amassed nearly 65,000 yards over his career.

The first time I met Flutie, it was completely by chance. I was meeting a friend at a Super Bowl party in Jacksonville 18 months ago and we were standing around the bar. The place was rocking.

Now, typically when there's a football player with Flutie's credentials at a Super Bowl event, not only does the athlete stand out physically (football players generally being large individuals), but he also has an entourage and/or a mass of fans mobbing him for autographs.

On that night, only one person separated Flutie and me. Yet I had no idea he was there until my friend pointed him out standing a few feet away. He was just blending in.

After Doug's brother Darren introduced us, we talked for about half an hour. What I took away from the conversation was that Flutie could still play quarterback as well as anybody. However, he was a victim of circumstance. At the time, he was still the property of the San Diego Chargers, a team that already had a proficient starting QB (Drew Brees). And with the Chargers determined to use the first overall draft pick that year to secure their quarterback of the future (they eventually dealt for Philip Rivers), Flutie's chances of getting on the field dropped from slim to none. I can't forget him saying to me, "I can still play. I just have to find someone who'll let me on the field."

Of course, Flutie's NFL career has always been that way: trying to find a place where they'd just give him the damn ball and let him play, like Cowboy Jack Bicknell eventually did at Boston College.

After we said our good-byes, I left the establishment and went to hail a cab, but there were none to be found. (Ah, Jacksonville!) I was still waiting for one when Flutie and his buddies came outside. They noticed me and offered me a ride bac my hotel, even though it was in the o site direction from theirs.

It's amazing the hold he still maint on this region. Flutie played in onl games in the NFL, and just a handfu Belichick. But you'd have thought lichick had coached him for a decade. just one year as a backup in 2005.

"Doug will always have a special p in my career, when I think back to al players I've coached," Belichick says the 31 years that I've coached in the N we've had a lot of game plans, a l plays—the trick plays. I don't t there's ever been a special play in coaching career that we've had as m fun with as a team, as an organization says, referring to Flutie's extra point in last year's regular season finale ag Miami in Foxboro. "There's no pl that's more deserving to execute that than Doug Flutie."

HE WAS ALWAY TRYING TO FIND PLACE WHER THEY'D JUST GIV HIM THE DAMN BAL AND LET HIM PLA

A lot of great things have happen Foxboro over the last five years: tuck enforced, conference championships fans tossing snow into the air to cele another division title. And Flutie's kick stands near the top of the list.

I was recently at a charity auction w Flutie's 1983 Sports Illustrated cover, "I Big Man," was on the block—and manded big bucks. The guy that w said he wanted to show it to his kids inspiration to the little guys out there

"I'm small. My wife is small. My will likely be small," said the winning der. "And I want to show them that thing is possible."

We may have just watched the all greatest athlete under 5'10". Thank the memories, Doug. And thanks fo drop kick, too. IB

IOANNIS MIAOULIS

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Born and raised in Athens, Ioannis Miaoulis, 44, is the president and director of the Museum of Science, Boston's most attended cultural institution. It's rated by Zagat as No. 16 among the nation's family destinations, and as one of the top two science museums in the country. Miaoulis came to the United States to attend Tufts University, where he earned both his bachelor's and doctorate degrees in mechanical engineering and a master's degree in economics. He also received a master's in mechanical engineering from MIT. He's published more than 100 research papers and holds two patents. His numerous honors and accolades include the Presidential Young Investigator Award, the Allan MacLeod Cormack Award, the William P. Desmond Award, the Boston Jaycees Outstanding Young Leader Award and a Mellon Fellowship. He is cochair of the state Technology/Engineering Education Advisory Council, served on the Math and Science Education Advisory Council and is a trustee of WGBH. He lives in Sherborn with his wife and two daughters.

Jonathan Soroff: OK, your name is almost impossible to spell. Ever think of changing it?
IM: No. I got stuck with it because it was on my passport, and when I started doing research and publishing papers, I used it. So I can't change it, because the references would get messed up. But at least I always know when it's a telemarketer or a salesman on the phone, because they say, "Can I speak to Yo-Anus, please?"
JS: You're an engineer. Do most people in this country misunderstand what that means?
IM: Yes, and it's one of my passions to change that misperception. In Europe, engineering is one of the most prestigious and competitive disciplines, but here, engineers have allowed the term to be used for other things, like people who drive trains. So I'm sort of on a mission to let people know what engineers really do. Over 90 percent of the things we use every day, an engineer has touched.
JS: Best place for Greek food in Boston?
IM: There are many good ones. Meze in Charlestown is a great restaurant. I've heard that there's a fabulous place in Ipswich, and I think there's a great place for casual lunches called the Greek Corner in Cambridge on Mass. Ave.
JS: Greece's greatest contribution to science?
IM: There have been so many, and even today, if you look at the faculties of the best universities, you find a disproportionate number of Greeks. So the tradition that started with Archimedes and all the other ancients still continues today.

"I'M ON A MISSION TO LET PEOPLE KNOW WHAT ENGINEERS REALLY DO. OVER 90 PERCENT OF THE THINGS WE USE EVERY DAY, AN ENGINEER HAS TOUCHED."

JS: One thing you'd like people to know about the Museum of Science that they don't?
IM: For the last three years, we've housed a new national center for technological literacy where we educate hundreds of thousands of kids from the New England region, but now our educational programs and books are used in about 26 other states. Our activities extend way beyond New England.
JS: One thing no one should leave the museum without seeing?
IM: I would say our Theater of Electricity, where we can generate amazing lightning effects. That's what got me hooked on the museum. The second day I [was in] the United States, I had the morning off and I came to the museum and saw the lightning show. It was amazing.
JS: Most popular thing?
IM: The Discovery Centers are very popular. We have one, the Human Body Connection, where we explore human biology, genetics and the evolution of humans. That's an area we'll be significantly expanding with financial help from local medical and biomedical technology companies; we want to have a Hall of Human Life, and our ambition is to be the best in the world at displaying human biology. Also, our Omni Theater is the only 180-degree IMAX dome in New England.
JS: One thing the museum should have but doesn't?
IM: A big endowment.
JS: What's your response to people who say that exhibits like the Star Wars one pander to commercialism?
IM: If they mean "commercial" because Star Wars is such a known brand, that's a technique we use effectively. We take an entity that's popular and attractive and brings in visitors, and then we sneak in a good dose of education in science and engineering.
JS: Name three scientists you'd most like to have dinner with.
IM: I'd like to have dinner with my 10th grade physics teacher and my undergraduate adviser from Tufts. I'll leave it at those two, because after that the list just goes on. The reason I choose them is that they made me fall in love with science, and my adviser at Tufts made me passionate about engineering.
JS: What's the most interesting branch of science these days?
IM: Probably anything to do with molecular biology and genetics, the life sciences. That's the area that will probably significantly contribute to the improvement of human life.
JS: State of scientific education in schools?
IM: Not good. I think there are two problems. First, I think we don't teach the right topics. They were pretty much determined in the 1800s and haven't changed since, which is why the science curriculum focuses on the natural world only. I also think the salaries we pay science teachers are inadequate to attract qualified people to teach science and engineering.
JS: Is ours the best science museum in the country?
IM: Well, Zagat ranks us No. 1 along the National Air and Space Museu Washington, D.C., but I still think v No. 1 in value. They don't charge ad sion, and if you divide any number by you get infinity.
JS: What makes a museum great?
IM: The staff and the volunteers. We have a fantastic board of trustees and seers. The beautiful view doesn't hurt, ei JS: Is there a scientific explanation why sock always goes missing in the dryer?
IM: [Laughs.] In my house, it'd be bec my golden retriever stole it.
JS: Why is the sky blue?
IM: Oooh. I don't want to blow this because that would be embarrassi think it's how light travels through th mosphere.
JS: What one scientific discovery do you credit for?
IM: A single scientist can rarely credit for anything, since it's usually laborative effort. For instance: You how when you touch a butterfly, yo dust on your fingers? Those are scale [at Tufts] we discovered that one of functions is to act as solar colle They're cold-blooded and have to a heat from the sun, and that's how th it. But what was significant was that our mechanical engineering and ph backgrounds that allowed us to dis that; a lot of biologists wouldn't have able to do that.
JS: How about a discovery you didn't m but would've loved to?
IM: Microsoft.
JS: Last question: What's one thing that learned this week at the museum?
IM: I learn a lot every day, but this w learned that President Bush nominat for the National Museum and Libra vices Board. IB

Well, what girl doesn't need any—tickets, that is. Yes, you'll definitely need those, d be prepared to pay. A ticket into Fenway is the most highly prized (and highest-iced) in all of baseball. Single-game tickets—if you can get them—range from $12 for eacher seats (not recommended for our posh purposes) to $275 apiece in the private MC Club. And those are face-value prices; you'll pay more if you go through a ticket oker. But don't panic. Just think of the cost as a worthy investment in your future. fter all, you'd certainly pay twice as much for those new Manolo Blahnik sandals u've been eyeing at Barneys. It's all about channeling (not Chanel-ing) your resources operly. Besides, if you play your baseball cards right, you might get into the game and ve your Manolos, too!

Now that you've secured a seat, how do you ensure the highest returns before, during d after your Fenway experience? After extensive field research, in-depth statistical alysis, some trials and even a few errors, we've developed this handy, user-friendly, al's Guide to Fenway Park.

PREGAME PREP

Learn the Boys of Summer Basics

fore you head to the ballpark, you'll want to brush up on the basics of the game—just case you find yourself comparing "stats" with some hunk behind home plate. We sug-st watching or listening to a game before your official visit to Fenway. Most games air NESN (New England Sports News), where commentators Don Orsillo and Jerry emDawg) Remy offer some of the most entertaining play-by-play in the business. As added bonus, they invite all the celebrity eye candy to their broadcast booth. On ur radio dial, turn to WEEI, 850 AM, where veteran sportscasters Joe Castiglione and rry Trupiano call the game.

If you want to go the extra mile, try reading the sports section of the Boston Globe or ston Herald. Also, check out the Red Sox' official Web site (www.redsox.com). It ves up-to-date information on the team, including statistics, standings and more.

You can only learn so much by studying, though. After a few Fenway outings, you'll really get to know the players. But don't get too attached to any one slugger: You're rooting for the team. Besides, this year's darling may be next season's foe. (Remember Johnny Damon?)

Suit Up and Put On Your Game Face

A proper fashion lineup starts with a good bottom line. You're going to see the Red Sox, so go with red lingerie. Something lacy from La Perla will give you that added bit of confidence to really get your game on. Then suit up in casual but sporty attire. Reasonably comfortable (but cute) shoes are recommended, as you'll traverse ramps and concrete stairs—and nine innings will seem like an eternity if your toes are pinched, while perched in heels.

For day games, make sure you wear sun protection, as your seats might not be shaded. Take the advice of Dr. Ranella Hirsh of Cambridge, a board-certified dermatologist and vice president of the American Society of Cosmetic Dermatology and Aesthetic Surgery: "Look for something with either Broad Spectrum Protection or UVA and UVB Protection. Keep in mind that you want to apply at least half an hour before leaving for the game; it takes that long for the product to penetrate."

As for your coif—what else? A baseball cap. Where else is it fashionable, besides being utilitarian? It'll shield you from the sun during the day and keep your hair from blowing and frizzing out of control at night. If Fenway's traditional basic blue cap isn't for you, try the updated, flirty version in pink or lavender. And if your locks are long, our recent studies show that wearing ponytails poking out of that hat hole in the back will earn you high praise from the male faction of Red Sox Nation.

For night games, bring a jacket or sweater—after all, the Boston wind often whips through the park at a good clip. Your purse: Keep it compact. No guy likes a gal with too much baggage. And seating, even in the premium sections, is somewhat spatially challenged, so your high-end Prada might end up under your seat for the game's duration.

THE WARM-UP

Hit These Bars and Clubs Outside the Park

Field research reveals that most pregame venues attract a 60 percent male clientele. To take full advantage of these favorable odds, arrive early; the lines have been known to queue out to the streets.

Savvy establishments like Game On!, at the corner of Lansdowne Street and Brookline Avenue, recognize that catering to the gals is good for business. "We all know why guys go out—to meet attractive ladies," states Will J., Game On's general manager. The menu offers apps to entrées, including buffalo wings, brick oven pizzas, lobster ravioli and salmon ($8–$15). Seventy-plus flat screen TVs keep ticket-holders tuned in to the pregame action.

Cask 'n' Flagon, also on Brookline Avenue, recently underwent a head-to-toe, round-the-bases renovation. Originally known for unruly dudes, the Cask is reported to have some of the city's toughest bouncers (who are actually quite charming—and buff), so you're safe in their hands. Waitress Sam P. states that for bevvies, Fenway gals prefer Bud Light by the pitcher or a Bloody Sock straight up. You might even want to throw back a High Heat Martini for an extra-fast fix!

Brew Gals should head to Boston Beer Works, on Brookline Ave., where Blueberry Ale is a raving fave, and soon-to-arrive Watermelon Ale should quench any thirst this summer. Cutie doorman Ian P. will keep you entertained while you're on deck in the line to get in. When you finally make it to the bar, try a pint of Fenway Pale Ale with the array of pub food selections. Director of BBW Joe F. welcomes all women, often recounting the many lasting relationships that have started here (including some that resulted in marriage). And don't forget to sample the Victory Red Ale—a part of Sox history, with the first barrel brewed when they won the 2004 World Series.

For those who think baseball is all franks and beers, be duly advised. The pinnacle of pregame jewels is the Crown Royal Club, located on the third-base side of Fenway Park, complete with an exclusive entryway: Admittance is only for the select few holding EMC Club tickets. Only the tip-top of top shelf is served here, and although jackets aren't required, there aren't any diamonds in the rough here, either.

Scout the Shops

Fashionistas, have no fear! Yawkey Way, aka Rodeo Drive East (for sporting wear and memorabilia), will surely satiate any shopaholic tendencies. Red Sox–logo hats, T's, tanks, shorts, replica jerseys and, of course, "sox" are readily available for purchase. And for those gals who love their bling, there's even a selection of Red Sox jewelry to adorn your necks, ears and wrists.

The Boys of Summer

Check out this handy seating chart, a guide to who's who, and what their tickets reveal about them

Bleacher Dudes: From here to the skies. Smell of beer, but not of dough!

SRO—Standing Room Only: "Fahgett-about-it." (Non-holding, non-seating—no way!)

Right Field Box: Pesky Poles (and we're not talkin' about the European kind).

Grandstand Guys: Need we say more?

Budweiser Roof Party Animals: Bar scene, complete with cabaret tables and a game view.

Loge Box Boys: They're on deck. Warm up with them before moving on to the real heavy hitters.

Field Box Die-Hards: First- and third-base DNA-generated fans inhabit these heirloom seats handed down from generation to generation. True blue Old Money. Rumor has it that the first field box–holders came over on the Mayflower.

Behind-Home Plate Players: If you want to add to your RBIs (Rich Boy Invitations), go for these seats—you'll even be seen on TV.

The Infamous Green Monster: The envy of all baseball fans. Good place to catch a Manny-being-Manny home run, or a celeb sighting.

Club Pavilion Seats and State Street Pavilion: Tickets start at $150 a pop. Translation: Money in the bankers! A worthy investment of time and cash.

EMC Club: Exclusive Men's Club (tickets cost a whopping $275 per seat). These boys' bases are loaded, 24/7!

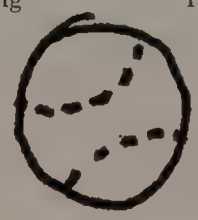
Fans' Dugout: By invitation only; do not call, e-mail or text. You have nine innings in this game to work on your exclusive invite to the next. (Includes all EMC Club posh perks as well.)

Red Sox Dugout: Sluggers, catchers, fielders and pitchers: If you're planning to score a professionally ranked player, here are the vital stats to know: Out of 25 players, six are unmarried! Ages range from 23 to 42, with salaries that rival the Trumpster's.

THE GAME PLAN

Cover Your Bases

Fenway Park holds over 38,800 fans, majority male, so if you're in the market for a date, the potential is practically limitless. Remember: It's not whether the Red Sox win or lose, it's how you play the game. So step up to the plate and get ready to raise your dating average. Expert quantitative strategist, baseball stats guru and right Soxy chick Diane Garnick says, "For women attending ballgames, particularly those at Fenway, take heed! I cannot count the number of times I've heard men say something along the lines of, 'If I ever meet a woman who is as into baseball as I am, I'm marrying her on the spot.'" There's your pitch, gals. So get off your benches and get into that batter's box!



MAKE YOUR PITCH

First, second and third innings

Fuel up (especially if you didn't have time to partake of pregame noshing); you'll need lots of energy for nine innings of sport. But use your time in concession lines wisely. Scout your male fan base while you're choosing from Fenway's diverse food selections. From steak tips to pizza to cotton candy, the ballpark will satisfy your need for protein, carbs and sweets. And what's a trip to Fenway without sampling a delicious 'dog? We recommend the Monster Dog, only available on the Green Monster. Warning: Once you've wrapped your mouth around this big, fat, succulent Monster, every other hot dog will have had its day.

Worried these won't satisfy your epicurean taste? Ensconce yourself in either the State Street Pavilion Club or the EMC Club and feast on their lavish buffets and extensive menus. Even better: Score an invit dine on some of Fenway Juan scrumptious delights. Your taste b will be in pennant heaven, thank the on-site chef.

Thirsty yet? Contrary to popu belief, baseball isn't all about guzzl beer. Most sections of the park a offer ale, wine, frozen cocktails a an assortment of soft drinks. Cert areas even let you select from a bar—including a wine bar in EMC Club.

Fourth, fifth and sixth innings

As the game progresses, so does friendly repartee. Don't cry foul if guy next to you asks, "What did I m at the top (or bottom)?" He's re ring to either the first half of the ning, when the visiting team bats the second half, when the Red S are up. Keep up a good defense if dude is a dud, but go on offense a hit right back if the lad seems lik worthy catch. But beware of m who keep their left hands pocket The lines they're throwing may im that they're in free agency, but t hidden ring says they've signed a c tract for life.

Seventh-inning stretch

Stand up, stretch and strut your st It's time to check that scorecard. sess how many hits have landed on base—or at least have landed a date for postgame cocktails.

Eighth and ninth innings

During the eighth, if your nam Caroline, you'll be sweetly se naded—the rest of you, get back in the game. There are only two innings left to ensu successful outing, which means it's time for relief—and the closer. You'll only be abl throw a few more pitches, so dig deep and bring the heat. Line those players up, and their numbers (or give out yours). The object of the game is to fill your roster until next home stand.

THE POST GAME

Bat 1.000 No Matter Who Won

Postgame activities offer many opportunities to see and be se Choices run the gamut from casual pubs to high-end clubs. Lansdo Street sets you up right as you exit the park: Tequila Rain, Bill's Bar, J Ivory's and Avalon, to name a few, are right there.

After a day or night of intense gaming, we prefer to relax a bit and do w we do best: meet, greet and eat. A block away from the Fenway fray is East Standard on Comm. Ave. Dine al fresco, at the bar or in the main din room; the extensive menu is sure to please a myriad of palates. And if the b game goes into extra innings, a late-night menu offers a smaller selection midnight. The crowd after a game is mixed, but happily, it's mostly male—g erally professional and reasonably well coiffed, even if in ballpark attire. Patrons invited to sip signature cocktails, nibble one of the tastiest burgers in Beantow slurp offerings from the raw bar.

The Foundation Lounge, just next door (below the Hotel Commonwealth), is other postgame spot for the hip, chic sportifs. Chill on plush couches, stir it up champagne martinis and sample late-night, Japanese-style apps and light bites (se until 12:30 am).

"If you build it, they will come." "They" means us, ladies! It's just like that anti sign inside the park says: "Fenway, Where Dreams Come True." So realize th dreams. And when they're fulfilled, we expect an engraved ticket to sit with you on Green Monster. The Monster Dogs (with extra mustard) are on us. IB

ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW ABOUT THE HOTTEST SHOWS OF THE SEASON

SOUNDS OF SUMMER

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Maybe you already have plans to head to Tennessee's sweeping Bonnaroo or the Montreal Jazz Festival this summer. But you actually don't have to travel that far to hear great music—including some of same acts that will play those big gigs. A diverse eup of outdoor concerts and festivals is already in place Boston and environs. Here are 10 stellar outings hin an easy ride of home.

diohead, Bank of America Pavilion (June 4 and 5)

e event that's sure to set the bar at any venue this sea-, Radiohead's show takes place at the harborside iopy for an intimate night of new material and old fa-ites. Kid Rock wouldn't dig it, but U2 fans looking for w frontiers should, given the English quintet's recent ertoire of textural art rock peppered with electronics l Thom Yorke's keening tenor. If tickets prove impossi- to land, check out a next-generation alternative, the hy British power trio Muse—in a show that's just been nounced but not yet confirmed—at the Pavilion Aug. 2. w.teapartyconcerts.com.

h Connections Festival, Irish Cultural Centre in nton (June 9–11)

il Brady, Damien Dempsey, Solas, Maura O'Connell, rtin Hayes & Dennis Cahill, Alison Brown, Crooked Still and Gráda are among the highlights at this annual Celtic summit. After many years at Stonehill College, the festival now takes place on the sponsor's 46-acre grounds, capping a weeklong area celebration of Irish culture with dancers, athletes, actors, poets and authors who supplement the world-class musicians playing multiple stages. www.irishculture.org.

Nine Inch Nails/Bauhaus, Tweeter Center (June 23)

A potent double punch of industrial/goth-rock pioneers. Newly buff NIN mastermind Trent Reznor is clean and recharged with his latest CD, With Teeth, and a fresh backing band capable of translating his moody musings and sledgehammer riffing to the floodlights. And the original Bauhaus, fronted by the theatrical Peter Murphy, is back in fine form to reanimate gloomy classics like "Bela Lugosi's Dead." With a bonus opener in the combustible TV on the Radio, this bill is a bracing way to welcome summer's first true nightfall. www.teapartyconcerts.com.

Etta James/Susan Tedeschi/James Hunter, BOA Pavilion (June 24)

The groundwork is laid for the feisty James to shine on this cross-generational triple bill of bluesy R&B and soul. After a gastric bypass to lose half of the 400 pounds that left her largely immobile, the 68-year-old legend (whose hits include "At Last" and "Tell Mama") is back with All the Way, a new record on which she has the chutzpah to reinterpret James Brown's "It's a Man's, Man's, Man's World" and Prince's "Purple Rain." Norwell native Tedeschi, a headliner in her own right, also knows how to bridge soul and blues, while Brit upstart Hunter evokes the smooth sound of Sam Cooke. www.teapartyconcerts.com.

Seu Jorge, Museum of Fine Arts Concerts in the Courtyard (July 5)

Best know for his work in the films City of God and The Life Aquatic With Steve Zissou (in which he crooned David Bowie songs in Portuguese), Jorge is a bona fide star, both in his native Brazil and beyond. After selling out a show at the MFA last fall, he returns for a pair in the museum's lovely inner courtyard (it'll be a shame if rain forces things into Remis Auditorium). A close runner-up in the series is a July 12 pairing of the ghostly jazz-blues songstress Jolie Holland with the versatile roots collective Ollabelle with Amy Helm (whose famous father, Levon, played and sang in the Band). www.mfa.org.

Dave Matthews Band/Sheryl Crow, Fenway Park (July 7 and 8)

What better way to celebrate summer than with this year's annual rock offering at the old ballpark? If the acoustics click, DMB's fiddle-fueled rave-ups should fare better at Fenway than his moody ballads—though the removal of the .406 Club's glass façade behind home plate will make everything sound a lot better. And returning to the road after breast cancer treatment, Sheryl Crow should round out the bill nicely with her rootsy mainstream pop. www.teapartyconcerts.com.

Wilco, Pines Theatre at Look Park in Northampton (July 16)

With the loss of Lincoln's DeCordova Museum as an outdoor concert venue, the state's most idyllic setting for live music has become this narrow, grassy slope with a stone stage rimmed by pine trees. It's certainly a cozy spot to catch innovative Chicago rockers Wilco (last in Boston at the Agganis Arena) when they visit this summer. It should be a dynamic evening, given the levitating guitar flights of leader Jeff Tweedy and Nels Cline, which have lately evoked the heyday of Crazy Horse and Television. And folk-punk star Ani DiFranco plays the Pines July 11. www.iheg.com.

Bela Fleck & the Flecktones/Del McCoury Band/ Natalie MacMaster, BOA Pavilion (Aug. 7)

Breaking from the jam-rock grind to return to jazz-inflected roots with The Hidden Land, the Flecktones veer to banjo trailblazer Fleck's acoustic roots for this triple bill with bluegrass veteran McCoury and Nova Scotian fiddler MacMaster (the trio also hits the Cape Cod Melody Tent Aug. 8). It's a collaboration-ready package to rival the more politically oriented reunion of Crosby, Stills, Nash & Young at the Tweeter Center Aug. 16. That quartet has launched its first tour in four years, dubbed Freedom of Speech '06 and serving as a vehicle for Neil Young's scathing new album Living With War, which he was streaming for free on the Web before its release. www.teapartyconcerts.com.

Dunkin Donuts Newport Folk Festival/ JVC Jazz Festival, Fort Adams State Park in Newport, R.I. (Aug. 4-6/Aug. 11-13)

Few summer concert settings are as striking as the shadow of Fort Adams, framed by the bridge and boats of Newport Harbor. The first August weekend's initial folk lineup boasts David Gray, Rosanne Cash (whose Black Cadillac honors her father's memory as one of the year's better CDs), soul survivor Bettye LaVette, Indigo Girls and Madeleine Peyroux, as well as vaunted newcomers Grace Potter & the Nocturnals and Sonya Kitchell. The last day of the jazz fest truly stands out, with Dave Brubeck, Afro-pop powerhouse Angelique Kidjo, Chris Botti, the Bad Plus, sax virtuoso James Carter (who also co-leads a group playing the music of rockers Pavement Aug. 12) and piano firebrand Hiromi. www.festivalproductions.net.

Rhythm and Roots Festival, Ninigret Park in Charlestown, R.I. (Sept. 1-3)

Like a coastal New England microcosm of New Orleans' Jazz and Heritage Fest, this more family-friendly Labor Day Weekend bash is a descendent of the old Cajun-bluegrass festivals in Escoheag. The main stage should be rocking a bit harder this year with Los Lobos and Dr. John (who leads a Johnny Mercer tribute at the Tanglewood Jazz Festival the same weekend—see sidebar), while tents remain busy with bands and dancers alike. Steve Riley, Rosie Ledet and Nathan Williams represent Cajun and zydeco styles, while David Bromberg, the Spanish Harlem Orchestra, 2006 Grammy-winning bluegrass icon Tim O'Brien and James Hunter help round out the bill. And the kids can enjoy music lessons, plus late-afternoon Mardi Gras parades led by Boston's own Hot Tamales Brass Band. www.rhythmandroots.com. IB

Symphony Haul

The Hatch Shell hosts WCRB's Wednesday night concert series.

Wynton Mars

Some think that classical music takes the summer off. Think again: Great music is everywhere, just in more seasonally appropriate venues. It's a time for orchestras and smaller groups to experiment a little, stretch out their musical wings—and give audiences a new take on great traditions.

As usual, the summer's splashiest event isn't a dip in the Charles, but the Pops Esplanade Orchestra's annual Independence Day bash at the Hatch Shell. This year there are two concerts, on July 3 and 4; both are free, of course. The music is straight Americana, but the spectacular fireworks more than make up for that. It's a mob scene, so plan to arrive early if you want a favored spot. (Even better: If you've got a chum with a boat, bribe him into inviting you, along with that chicken salad recipe.) www.hatchshell.com.

Further afield, but just as much fun, is opening night at Tanglewood, later that week on July 7. James Levine conducts—as long as his repaired rotator cuff is ready to go—and the program includes Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Ninth. You can get lawn tickets for $18, but if you really want to impress your date, spring for the top ticket; for a mere $2,500 apiece, you'll also have access to pre- and post-concert bashes. www.tanglewood.org.

The Boston Landmarks Orchestra has done some nice things in its six short seasons, including free concerts each summer. Its al fresco season begins July 19 at the Hatch Shell with a celebration of Mozart's 250th birthday. Charles Ansbacher conducts the 39th Symphony and Mozart's last work, the wondrous Requiem, the latter featuring the New World Chorale. www landmarksorchestra.org.

Classical station WCRB is likely to change forma soon, but it's still aggressively promoting outdoor co certs this summer. On five Thursdays at 12 pm, begi ning June 1, the station introduces new artists at Cople Square. Performers include flutist Deborah Charness f the opening concert, followed by string ensemble Mi tral (June 8) and others. WCRB also hosts orchestr music at the Hatch Shell on Wednesday evenings, begi ning July 12 and running through the end of Augus Highlights include the Longwood Symphony Orchestr (Aug. 16) and the New England String Ensemble (Au 30). Both series are free. www.wcrb.com.

For something completely different, the Cambridg River Festival, which takes place June 17, brings a swar of folks to Memorial Drive to enjoy a rich variety of event including jazz, folk, rock and world music artists. Com and enjoy the crowd—often more than 100,000 stron www.cambridgeartscouncil.com.

And if by the end of the summer you're not sick of ou door music yet, make one more trek out to Tangl wood for the Jazz Festival. Performers at the Sept. 1- event include the Spanish Harlem Orchestra, Wynto Marsalis, Marian McPartland with Elvis Costello, and Jo Pizzarelli. Seat prices range from $30–$75, but $17 ge you on the lawn for most concerts. www.tanglewoodja festival.com.

Seek and Ye Shall Find

It's open season at New England's flea markets and antiques fairs.

BY REGINA COLE

h, summer: time to grab a pair of comfy shoes, a shade-providing hat, a road map, some sunscreen and some cash; head out on the winding, two-lane roads to see the countryside; and ramble through pretty villages in search of some splendid, oddball thing.

Antiquing used to be considered a pastime of the rich and lineaged, of elderly ladies in tennis shoes and of overenthusiastic interior decorators. Antiques Roadshow, among other media influences, has changed all that; now everyone knows that there's treasure lurking in the attic, and that grandma's ugly vase may be more precious than the sleek new dining room table. And shopping for the unique, old, rare or just plain weird object is for anyone with a penchant for things not found at the mall, whether they be 1970s lunch boxes, mercury glass, Cabbage Patch Kids, 1940s floral fabric, wooden chessmen or Georgian pie-crust tables.

Antiques shops, fairs and flea markets are among New England's rural treasures; no other part of the country is so well endowed. The business began nearly 100 years ago, when Americans, newly appreciative of their early history, began to cherish the decorative and useful objects from the country's youth. New England simply had more antiques, due partly to its long history, and partly to the traditional Yankee frugality and reluctance to throw anything away. Today we reap the benefits.

So here's a guide to a few fun and important shows, and to some areas where the antiques shops jostle each other like commuters at rush hour. A single tank of gas should get you there and back. And even if you come home empty-handed, you may find a great seafood lunch, an ultimate view, a new vacation destination or a place to periodically return to as you hunt down those hand-carved wooden chessmen.

Brimfield

The mother of all antiques shows began in the 1950s in a field at the outskirts of a small town in the Berkshire foothills. Since then it's grown to almost unimaginable proportions, much of it still outdoors. Over 6,000 dealers leasing 23 fields' worth of space make up the Brimfield show, and shoppers come from all over the world to browse. If you love crowds, the challenge of the hunt and unexpected finds from the ridiculous to the sublime, and if traffic and parking logistics don't scare you, then Brimfield is for you. Whole books describe the best ways to navigate this show, but the Brimfield Web site is a fine place to start preparing. (www.brimfieldshow.com; 800-782-5425)

Schedule: There are three annual events, each spread over six consecutive days. The events always start on the second Tuesday in May, the first Tuesday following the Fourth of July and the first Tuesday following Labor Day. This summer's dates are July 11–16 and Sept. 5–10.
Other attractions: The area is best known as home to Old Sturbridge Village (www.osv.org; 800-SEE-1830), a living history museum that portrays life in an 1830s New England village.
Directions: Take the Mass. Pike (Interstate 90) west to Exit 9 in Sturbridge. From there signs will direct you to the show, about six miles away.

Todd Farm Antiques and Flea Market, Route 1A, Rowley, Mass.

During the wee hours of Saturday night and into Sunday morning, a gypsy-like caravan of trucks and vans assembles in a wide farm field in Rowley to set up for Todd Farm Antiques and Flea Market. Early birds on Sunday morning from April to November get their pick of a colorful mélange of goods for sale at this venerable show that's been active for 31 years. There are usually upward of 200 dealers, in addition to the permanent antiques shops located in the farmhouse and barn. (www.toddfarm.com; 978-948-3300)

Schedule: Every Sunday through Nov. 26, 5 am–3 pm; the farmhouse and barn are open 10 am–4 pm every day.
Other attractions: Near Todd Farm are a pair of historic house museums: the Spencer-Peirce-Little Farm off Route 1A in Newbury, about three miles to the north, and the Whipple House in the center of Ipswich, about two miles to the south. Todd Farm is about five miles south of Newburyport, an architecturally and historically interesting small city full of shops and restaurants housed in red brick Federal buildings.
Directions: Take Interstate 95 north to Exit 54 (Rowley & Georgetown), then follow Route 133 east. Go straight through the lights at Route 1, and continue to follow Route 133 east to Route 1A. Turn left onto Route 1A north; after about one mile, you'll find Todd Farm on the right.

How To Buy

An antiques-shopping cheat sheet

✻ Flea markets sell both new and old things, but not in any logical or predictable proportion. Antiques stores and fairs sell only old things; strictly defined, antiques are at least 100 years old. A desirable object less than 100 years old is a collectible. Note that these definitions get squishier all the time.

✻ Consider bringing a backpack to hold small purchases and leave your hands free for foraging. Other things to bring, depending on your level of commitment: a flashlight (to look for imperfections, hallmarks, labels and construction details), measurements or color swatches, a tape measure, and business cards to give to dealers so they can call you when they find that perfect coat rack.

✻ When haggling over a price, negotiate, don't insult. Dealers know what their stuff is worth; if they give you their best price, counteroffer at your own risk.

✻ If you really love something, buy it. Don't expect to find it later, especially at a one-day event. Even in the most laid-back antiques stores, inventory changes constantly.

✻ Educate yourself so that you know what you're looking at. Of course you can't become an expert in any field just by reading a book or two, but if you're looking for, say, Irish linen, look at as much of it as you can, old and new, before you head out to buy.

✻ At flea markets and antiques fairs, the early bird gets the best selection. You may find a bargain at the end of a show, when dealers weigh packing and transporting against selling for less, but it'll rarely be a choice piece.

✻ It's all right to "just look." All flea market and antiques fairs hope you do browse. But don't regale dealers with lengthy descriptions of the old desk in your cellar if you have no intention of buying anything.

✻ Cash speaks volumes.

✻ Remember to have fun. Collectors and dealers go to shops and shows with a mission, but you have permission to enjoy yourself. If you buy just one plastic Pez dispenser but have a ball doing it, then you've done better than the expert with the furrowed brow.

Wellfleet Drive-In Theater Flea Market, Route 6 on outer Cape Cod, Mass.

Yes, there really is a 1950s drive-in theater, and all sorts of vendors flock there to sell all sorts of things. This flea market starts out slowly in April, but by July and August there can be hundreds of temporary booths. (www.wellfleetdrivein.com; 508-349-0541)

Schedule: Wed.-Thu., Sat.-Sun. and holiday Mondays, through October.
Other attractions: In good weather, visit Nauset Beach; but taste the famous local oysters in rain or shine. For art hounds, Wellfleet has the Cape's second-largest concentration of galleries.
Directions: Follow Interstate 93 or Route 128 to Route 3 south, toward Cape Cod. Take Route 3 over the Sagamore Bridge and follow Route 6 toward Provincetown. At the Orleans Rotary, stay on Route 6. The Wellfleet Drive-In Theater Flea Market is located just off of Route 6 on your left (as you head toward Provincetown) at the Eastham-Wellfleet town line, about eight miles past the Orleans Rotary.

"Antiques Alley," Route 4 in New Hampshire

For about 20 miles, as it wends its way through Northwood, Lee, Epsom and Chichester, this two-lane New Hampshire road passes antiques businesses from the modest to the vast. This has been a rural antiquing trail for many years, and the shops that line Route 4 represent the spectrum of antiques shops. (www.nhantiquealley.com)

Schedule: Dealers keep their own hours, but many run special sales during N.H. Antiques Week, Aug. 5–13.
Other attractions: Chainsaw art, RV dealerships, local stores, fast food—everything you'd expect to find on a rural New England road, and more.
Directions: Take I-95 north to Exit 4 (Spaulding Turnpike) in Portsmouth, N.H. Head west on the turnpike, and take Exit 6W (Route 4 west), just before the Dover tolls. Antiques Alley begins in about 10 miles.

Route 1 in southern Maine

Successful businesses attract more businesses, and so the section of scenic Route 1 between York and Kennebunk is a magnet for antiques dealers. There are all kinds, though few of them are at the flea-market end of the spectrum. Many shops specialize in nautical, Americana and decorative items. The area is, in some ways, an introduction to antiquing in Maine, which is rewarding and far-flung. Whole lifetimes have been spent on the Maine antiques trail; a day trip is a toe dipped into deep water indeed. For an introduction, see the Maine Antiques Dealers Association's Web site. (www.maineantiques.org)

Other attractions: Pretty coastal towns, lots of restaurants, beaches and Maine-quality fresh air.
Directions: Take I-95 north to Exit 7; take a left on Route 1. This stretch of road is long, and you may want to take it in sections, focusing, for instance, on the antiques-rich part of Route 1 that runs through Wells.

Essex, Mass.

This tiny North Shore village calls itself "America's Antiques Capital." A stretch that traverses salt marshes and the Essex River is lined with a jumble of charming, aged buildings filled with antiques. Most are located within walking distance of each other, and there's a wide range of merchandise, from the (barely) collectible to the rare and precious. Most businesses are long-established, and the dealers are great educational resources. Shops are open year-round, but summer is by far the best time to visit.

Other attractions: Essex's other claim to fame is the delicious soft-shell clam. If a storefront doesn't sell antiques, it probably sells fried clams. There are also lovely views of distant salt marshes and beaches.
Directions: Take I-95 north to Route 128 north, then take Exit 15, School Street. Make a left, toward Essex. Continue two miles and you'll be at the intersection of Route 1A and Route 133. Turn either right or left — you're there! IB

As the busy summer season approaches, two chefs prepare to feed the island's hungry hordes. Here's a look at the chaotic countdown.

Boston imports Amanda Lydon and Gabriel Frasca are giving the 30-year-old Straight Wharf an overhaul.

Frasca and Lydon plan to write a few new pages into Straight Wharf's history.

BY HILLARY GERONEMUS PHOTOGRAPHS BY BOB PERACHIO

riving down the road toward town in an Army-green Land Rover, the sound of frogs starts to interfere with the Manu Chao blaring from the speakers. Yes, Nantucket has its share of nature, but this sound isn't coming from outside. Its source is Gabriel Frasca's pocket, where the most overworked cell phone on the island is croaking away. Frasca answers, speaks for a moment and hangs up, frustrated. It was DHL, the first of many exchanges he'll be having with the shippers today. He's anxiously awaiting the arrival of his computer, which was sent off weeks ago to be repaired. According to Gateway, the machine was already returned and is somewhere on the Cape.

"I'd get it faster if it were strapped to the back of the harbor seal," he says, only slightly joking. "When you live on the island, you have to understand that things don't happen in a day; you have to allot at least two weeks for off-shore deliveries. It's not Boston, and that's a good thing. You just need to get into the right rhythm."

This is a lesson Frasca has learned all too well over the past few weeks, as he and his girlfriend/business partner, Amanda Lydon, prepare to open Straight Wharf. The restaurant will celebrate its 30th anniversary this Fourth of July, but the duo (along with the restaurant's co-owner, architect and island stalwart Jock Gifford) are giving the venerable icon a complete overhaul from the floors to the shingles—which means opening for the season is essentially like opening for the first time. And with only two weeks to go until D-day, there's still plenty to do.

With Provisions' Turkey Terrific sandwich, you can celebrate Thanksgiving in July. The trattoria Sfoglia serves authentic Italian in a rustic setting. Lydon an Frasca start their day at the Nantucket Bake Shop, but the island's only full-service bakery offers plenty for dessert, too. 7, 8 At Moors End Farm you can select from a variety of organic herbs, plants and seasonal flowers.

For example? "We have no water or gas," Frasca says. "We expected to get it two weeks ago. It's conceivable that we'll get it tomorrow. But then again, we've heard that before."

"Last night we had a pretty good freak-out," Lydon says. "Every 20 minutes I was like, 'Gabriel, you up?'"

As we walk into the kitchen, their anxiety becomes understandable. A bicycle is sprawled on the floor next to the stove; drinking glasses are coated with a thin film of sawdust; plates are stacked and wrapped in plastic; and a roller lies dormant in a pan of wet grey paint. Upstairs in the cramped office, two calendars provide a constant reminder of the task at hand. One contains two sets of numbers counting down: the number of days until opening, 15; and the number of employees still needed, 12. The other calendar is open to the month of May, with "Holy Shit—We're Open" handwritten on the square for the 19th.

Downstairs, the team Frasca and Lydon have recruited begins to assemble. First to arrive is Scott Fraley, the restaurant's new general manager and wine connoisseur. Frasca and Lydon first met Fraley during their tenure at Radius, and since then Fraley has made the Boston rounds, working at Ivy and Via Matta. Next in is Greg Budgell, the sous chef, wearing rubber gloves (he's remodeling the employee bathroom). Having cooked side-by-side with Frasca at Spire and Radius, Budgell was on his way to California when Frasca and Lydon made him an offer he couldn't refuse. "It's bad form to take chefs with you when you leave a restaurant, but Greg was already on his way out," Frasca says.

Everyone's on a cell phone, making plans for the day. Frasca has left for a neighbor's, hoping to print out the "multipage scary" to-do list. At the top of the list is "Post dishwasher job," at the bottom is "Test recipes," and in between, exhortations to clean and take inventory. "And did I mention clean?" Lydon laughs. Yet despite the extraordinary amount of work to be done, the people standing in the kitchen, especially Lydon and Frasca, seem relatively calm, and are even enjoying themselves.

To understand the couple's dynamic, you have to look back a few years—nine exact, when the two young chefs were cutting their teeth at Chez Henri in bridge. They began dating then and have been together ever since (if not kitchen, then at their Jamaica Plain home), traveling and cooking their way th Europe and Boston.

"There's no one I would rather argue with," Lydon explains. "Gabriel's the m person I know, and he's the best-equipped to deal with problems. We laugh a lot, the same time we'll argue our heads off."

Frasca concurs: "Normally I'm the type of person who, if I feel like I could do it I would just do it myself. But with Amanda, I can give away big chunks of work a good about it."

Opening Straight Wharf is giving the couple a chance to work together again several years of doing their own things—Lydon at UpStairs on the Square and T bles, Frasca at David Bouley's Danube, in Manhattan, and at Spire. And there's n ter place for such a reunion, as each has a connection to the storied Nantucket rant. Lydon, who spent summers as a girl on the island, worked in the kitchen in and three years ago, Frasca, who'd been headed for Singapore until the SARS stopped him, was the restaurant's chef de cuisine for a season.

"Even back then, I floated the idea that Amanda and I should take over S Wharf," Frasca admits. "While it remained successful, I felt it had so much poten do more—karmically, if not financially."

It must have been fate. Frasca called up his former boss Gifford last November about a possible partnership. "You know what Jock said—that just before the rang, he'd told his bartender that we'd be perfect for the job."

"I think I have the best of both worlds," Gifford says. "I have two incredible ch two people who respect the restaurant and the island."

Which brings us back to the dining room. Lydon's counting plates with Budge ley is doing inventory of the wine and taking reservations on an orange steno pac

FRASCA AND LYDON'S GUIDE TO NANTUCKET

The question shouldn't be what's my favorite part about living on the island, but what's my favorite part about living in a restaurant," Frasca laughs—and rightfully so. In addition to serving dinner, he and Lydon have decided to open Straight Wharf (6 Harbor Square, 508-228-4499) for lunch and brunch on weekends.

Located across the street from their apartment, most mornings begin with coffee, newspapers and the occasional glazed donut from the Nantucket Bake Shop (79 Orange St., 508-228-2797, www.nantucketbakeshop.com).

It's all about the Turkey Terrific," Frasca says, referring to the signature sandwich at Provisions (3 Harbor Square, 508-228-3258) next door to Straight Wharf—smoked turkey, warm stuffing, cranberry sauce and mayonnaise between two slices of Portuguese white bread.

Crushed–scallop shell paths separate the greenhouses at Moors End Farm (40 Polpis Road, 508-228-2674), the organic, mother/daughter-run operation with just about every kind of herb, plant and flower you can think of.

Now that Bartlett's Farm (33 Bartlett Farm Road, 508-228-9403, www.bartletts farm.com) has expanded to sell dry goods in addition to what they grow in the fields, it's the closest the island comes to having a Whole Foods. Be sure to try their strawberries—though, according to Lydon, you'll have to arrive at the crack of dawn to get some.

Cisco Brewers (508-325-5929, www.ciscobrewers.com) stores its beer in wine bottles, which are then served in an outdoor beer garden located next to Bartlett's Farm.

Down the bumpy dirt road leading away from Bartlett's Farm is Bartlett's Beach, the couple's favorite place to take in the sun and surf. "The surf is almost perfect (but a little dangerous), and the temperature is just on the edge of being cold enough to numb you and still feel good," Lydon explains.

According to Lydon and Frasca, Something Natural (50 Cliff Road, 508-228-0504) makes the best Portuguese white bread on the island.

Spending their days and nights at Straight Wharf, the last thing the couple wants to do when they leave is cook. That's where the Italian trattoria Sfoglia (130 Pleasant St., 508-325-4500, www.sfogliarestaurant.com) comes in. Both swear by the pastas, breads and desserts.

While the view from their second-story office over the harbor takes the cake, Frasca has one more spot on the island close to his heart—the view past the house named Amanda in Monomoy. He jokes, "I think I should buy it for Amanda for our anniversary."

local artist stops by to talk about creating some new paintings for the changed space. To the occasional diner, it may be hard to notice any differences. Most of the changes were structural, giving the 30-year-old building a much-needed facelift, plugging up holes, adding a new black splash and giving it a fresh coat of paint. The exposed beams remain, as do the interior shingled walls and the hand-carved fish that's become a symbol of the restaurant, if not Nantucket itself.

"If you squint everywhere, it's exactly the same," Frasca claims.

The menu, on the other hand, is getting a complete overhaul courtesy of Frasca and Lydon. Frasca has brought some of his signature items, such as "chicken under a brick," which incorporates sourdough panzanella, pine nuts, golden raisins and wild arugula ("same church, different pew," Frasca muses), but the restaurant and area have inspired a whole range of new dishes, including fried-clam salad of rocket, anise, and Meyer lemon; wild Chatham halibut with garlic-chive spätzle, morel mushrooms and chive blossoms; and a wood-grilled veal porterhouse accompanied by Anson Mills grits and ramps. "The buzz word is 'simple luxury,'" Frasca says. "Someone we know said it best—that we're trying to accomplish the ethos of peasant cooking with luxurious ingredients, the fat of the land."

In order to achieve this, the pair is seeking the help of those nearby. "We want to keep it as local as we can, because it's better for everyone," Lydon says. "What we don't want is to be carpetbaggers, coming in for the summer and leaving. Plus, it's a great way to get to know people on the island." That's why the team does its shopping for organic herbs at Moors End, and for strawberries at Bartlett's Farm. They've even employed the two young, entrepreneurial islanders behind Nantucket Native to set up their herb garden on the side of the restaurant.

But just having the best ingredients will only take you so far. This season competition on the island is heating up, with new restaurants opening (Slip 14, Lola 41) and old ones changing hands (The Chanticleer, Oran Mor, Topper's). "The island was ready for an infusion," Frasca says. "There's an unprecedented spate of change, but it's good to change the playing field."

On the way to Bartlett's Farm to pick up some chocolate mint and chives, which they'll pot and place on the tables as centerpieces, Frasca, Lydon and Budgell are stopped behind a row of cars when Frasca notices that there's a stray baseball glove sitting on the roof of the SUV in front of him. He puts the car in park, gets out, and climbs on top of the car to return the mitt to the driver. Getting back in, he comments on how nice it was that no one honked. Then his phone croaks. It's DHL. The good news is that they've tracked down who had the computer last. The bad news: That person is no longer with the company. Frasca smiles at Lydon and continues driving, the day coming to an end. Only 14 more to go. IB

In addition to the greenhouse, Bartlett's Farm has a market that sells fresh produce, dry goods and prepared foods.

THE PERFECT DILEMMA

A Death in Belmont* by Sebastian Junger details a murder in the days of the Boston Strangler.

The real shiver in this book is a picture taken of Baby Sebastian in his mother's arms. Behind her, looking rather handsome, is a carpenter named Al who'd done some work on the Jungers' Belmont house; the man later became famous as Albert DeSalvo, the confessed Boston Strangler. Once, looking up from the cellar, he gave a "bold male look" to Mrs. Junger, who was frightened and quickly bolted the door. By disastrous coincidence, a murder was committed a few blocks away; a black man from Mississippi named Roy Smith was arrested, convicted and sentenced to life in prison. As the story plays out, two tensions twinkle back and forth: Smith's possible innocence and Al's possible guilt, for this particular crime along with his 12 others. Closely plotted and rich with testimony, Junger's book makes much of the case against Smith look sketchy. So, did Al, who was also in Belmont that day, commit the murder? And—horrors—did he barely avoid killing Mrs. Junger? The timing is excitingly tight, and with Al murdered in prison, it's eerily riveting to read his confessions of other murders, now that he's safely no longer of this planet. The name Belmont suggests safety and comfort. But no.

FURNITURE WITH GOOD BONES

Oylan, at 364 Huron Ave., Cambridge (617-868-8887; woooylan@yahoo.com), is a mid-century modern furniture store and art gallery. Open Thu.–Sat., 11 am–7 pm; Sun., 12–5 pm.

Oylan is one of a string of stores Carl Tranghese has operated, including NV53 in Somerville (and later Cambridge), and Reside in Cambridge. Now Tranghese owns Oylan with Karen Woo. One reason his favored sleek furniture (of the 1930s–'70s) looks so streamlined and untroubled is that some of it was designed by architects, including Scandinavians. Teak, now endangered, is the wood on the curvaceous, winglike arms of some of these chairs, where simplicity speaks. A 1950s Hans Wegner sofa, backed with slices of African mahogany, is covered in pale, rusty-tomato linen, pleasingly straightforward. The also-endangered rosewood appears in a warm-feeling, lightly patterned table. The day bed, this one by Peter Hvidt, is as spare as an analyst's couch. It "daylights" as a sofa, but with the pillow removed it moonlights as a bed; in the m time, as Tranghese says, the piece invites "taking a nap in the afternoon." Most emblematic of thi niture's charm is a sensationally pure chair by architect Alvar Aalto, made of a buttery-colored, light, springy, flexible wood with swooping arms. It holds you in a low, whooshing position, almos a glider. A long, unadorned Danish credenza could hold tons of plates and silverware—or eve records inside its poker-faced rectangle. More adorned: rounded chairs once dotting Blooming stores, with a sophisticated, grate-like surround.

THE SPICE OF LIFE

Ken Oringer strikes again with tapas at Toro.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

Ken Oringer, chef/co-owner of the exquisite but pricey Clio restaurant and Uni sashimi bar in the Back Bay's Eliot Hotel, could've rested on his laurels. Winner of the 2001 James Beard Award as best chef in the Northeast (for Clio), and blazing new trails with Uni soon thereafter, he'd already made his mark on the Boston culinary scene. It must have been a populist streak that led Oringer to make his culinary craftsmanship available to a broader, less moneyed audience. The result is Toro, a chic, Catalonian tapas bar in the South End. Housed in a free-standing building on the east side of Washington Street near Mass. Ave., the space has been transformed by restaurant designer Peter Niemitz using an open floor plan that combines traditional elements from the cafés and tavernas of Barcelona with more modern elements of 21st-century urban chic. Here Oringer and his sous-chef, John Critchley, create a cornucopia of treats invoking the gastronomic riches of Catalonia and other Spanish provinces at reasonable prices.

Boquerones

Under an ultrahigh ceiling with exposed ducts, Toro accommodates about 60 diners at a pair of high, communal tables, lower tables along banquettes, and a long, stainless steel bar. Since the restaurant doesn't accept reservations, nabbing one of these coveted tables later in the week or on a weekend requires an early arrival, or a lot of patience. A bread-cutting table next to Toro's open kitchen yields fresh slices of excellent, firm-crusted Portuguese loaves from East Cambridge that help to turn the relatively small portions of Toro's tapas and pinchos (smaller tapas) into fully satisfying and filling dinners. Servers bring carafes of ice water freshened with lemon slices—a welcome relief from the obligatory, pricey bottled water of too many Boston restaurants. (An interesting wine list features choices across a broad price range.) Exposed brick walls and a huge stone fireplace complete the interior appointments, while an eye-catching blue-and-yellow awning adorns the front of the building.

On the waiter's strong recommendation during my first visit, I ordered the tortilla Española ($5), an exquisitely light omelet of potatoes and onions with sea salt, cut into bite-sized cubes and served slightly warm to bring out its full, rich flavor. A special tortilla on the same evening combined asparagus and green garlic in a basic omelet to make a moist, rich and savory treat, with the al dente asparagus especially appealing. Shuttling back and forth between pinchos and tapas, I selected the foie gras con chutney de pera ($6), a tiny but ambrosial nugget that combined the rich, velvety texture of foie gras, the grainy sweetness of pear and the smoky-saltiness of bacon. Smoked suckling pig rillette ($3) turned out to be a rich, coarse cube of pork pâté with tiny dollops of sweet, roasted red peppers, soft enough to be spread on toast. Pan con tomate ($3), delicate slices of soft, toasted bread slathered with sweet tomatoes, garlic, extra virgin olive oil and sea salt, made my taste buds stand at attention, as did the tiny alcachofa ($3), diminutive artichoke hearts wrapped in Serrano ham and seasoned with thyme and olive oil.

Moving back to the tapas, I enjoyed the boquerones ($7), seven slender, sleek, classic white anchovies in vinegar and olive oil that delivered a pleasantly fishy, moderately salty appetite wake-up call. Escalivada catalana ($6), a ratatouille-like ensemble of wood-roasted eggplant, onions, red and yellow peppers, tomatoes, sherry vinegar and olive oil, would have been better had it not arrived at the table refrigerator-cold, on a cold plate, masking its considerable flavors. I let it warm to room temperature, and it improved significantly. Similar reclamation measures weren't possible with the coles de Bruselas a la plancha ($6), undercooked Brussels sprouts that had been nicely browned but needed to be softer and more mellow in flavor.

The very small size of the tables that line Toro's banquettes have the salutary effect of encouraging the ordering of just a couple of dishes at a time, fostering experimentation by allowing the meal to u

The unique, resilient tex- (somewhere between lobster and), robust flavor and foamy fish-stock sh made the dish a standout among pas.

The lubina a la sal ($24), le sea bass, had been crusted with lt and baked in a pastry shell to pre- the firm, moist texture of the fish he aromatic flavors imparted by of garlic and fresh tarragon. Noth- ort of spectacular, the fish profited being expertly boned at tableside by aiter, who poured a small pitcher of oil between the filets of the boned With a second large plate offering, aella Valenciana ($32), Oringer and hley strayed south of Toro's Cat- an focus to the sunny province of cia and its classic seafood, chicken egetable casserole. Labeled "for two ree" on the menu, this huge portion could have easily served four or five—especially following a reasonable assortment of tapas. Tender, moist chicken; small, spicy cylinders of Spanish sausage; velvety, robust, roasted red peppers; sweet-tart tomatoes; clean sweet mussels; tender, exquisite littleneck clams; three huge shrimp; and a mountain of saffron-infused rice combined to form an extravaganza that transported our small party to the southeastern quadrant of the Iberian Peninsula.

For dessert, waiters reset the tiny tables with simple white towel placemats and a spoon for each diner. The crema Catalana ($7) showcased the traditional Spanish favorite, custard, in the form of a crème brûlée with a thick caramelized shell, flavored with cinnamon, bay and lemon, and garnished with rich, luscious fig. Churros ($7), three classic ribbed doughnut cylinders covered with cinnamon and sugar, came with a deep, dark Mexican chocolate sauce with peppery nuances that made it as different as it was delicious.

From Toro's wine list, I tried a glass of Osborne cabernet/temprenillo ($5), a serviceable house wine balanced between fruit and acidity. A bottle of the Finca Antigua 2002 cabernet sauvignon from Cuenca ($24) combined good fruit with mellowed, softened tannins, decent acidity and a fine finish. Toro served its lower-priced wines in tumbler glasses, perhaps to augment authenticity, perhaps to diminish breakage, while wines from its reserve list (which fetch Clio-level prices, ranging from $110–$625 per bottle) merited sophisticated, oversized stems from Riedel or one of its imitators.

Service on three visits to Toro did justice to the peerless performance of its kitchen. An attentive, efficient and amiable waitstaff enhanced the total dining experience, illustrating why this engaging eatery has generated and sustained an enthusiastic buzz since opening its doors several months ago. Spring Wine Wrap-Up

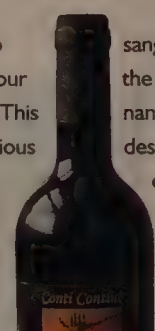
BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.

Spring is the time to experiment, to break out of the rut and expand your vision to include new possibilities. This season I've been tasting quite a few delicious wines that are a bit offbeat in terms of origin and/or grape variety. For one reason or another they don't fit neatly into any mainstream category, and may therefore be a little more challenging for retailers to sell, but it's this very uniqueness that makes them intriguing. Most are outstanding bargains. If you're interested in venturing out of your comfort zone a bit and going on a search for quality, give the following "conversation piece" wines a try.



Houghton Sémillon/Sauvignon Blanc, Western Australia, 2005 ($13.99)
Back in the 1980s, when few of us knew Australia even made wine, the country's enterprising vintners focused on a white grape that originates in Bordeaux: sémillon (pronounced SEM-ee-yon, but known Down Under as sem-el-LON). But they faced two problems: Most of the Aussie sémillon grapes came from baking-hot vineyards in the country's Southeast, and the fashion then favored extended aging in oak casks, which hid sémillon's natural fruit and softness under a layer of wood. As a result, it never gained fans here. Fast forward to 2006. With Australian wine everywhere, there's an openness to whatever the country is producing, and an especially strong reception awaits wines from western Australia, where barely 2 percent of the production originates. This cooler-climate region is home to Houghton, founded in the 19th century and continuing today as a small, premium, artisanal winery. Houghton blends sémillon with its Bordeaux partner, sauvignon blanc, in equal proportions and produces a pale, un-oaked, aromatic white wine, with a smooth, creamy texture, a faint touch of spritz and crisp, light apple and citrus flavors that are quite versatile with shellfish and other seafood. This is an anytime wine: on the deck, for brunch, or with white-fleshed fish and salads.

Marco Felluga Tocai Friulano, Collio, 2004 ($15.99)
This gem hails from northern Italy's most prestigious white wine region. Earthy and intense in aroma, with very ripe floral, apricot-like scents, the esteemed Felluga estate makes a tocai that's creamy and velvety in texture, very round and soft on the palate. It's great paired with seafood salads, or just as a warm-weather sipper.

Conti Contini Sangiovese, Tuscany IGT, 2004 ($9.99)
Italy's been our prime source of imported wine for several years. While the national red grape is sangiovese, grown throughout the central par the country, little of the wine we drink bears t name on the label; usually it has a geographic designation, such as Chianti, Brunello di Mont cino, Vino Nobile di Montepulciano or Car mignano—an impressive wine that's less well known, although classified at the highest official level (DOCG). Although made in Carmignano, Conti Contini's sangiovese is fruitier and less robust than those wines labeled Carmignano, more springtime than autumn. Grown on Tusc hillsides at elevations of up to 700 feet above sea level, the sangiovese vineyards here produce a lush, richly cherry-like wi with outstanding ripe flavors and just a bi an appetizing bite. Aged in French oak barr for 18 months to mellow the flavors, this 2002 sangiovese is exactly what I have in mind when recommending red wine with fish. Its spiciness pairs well with grilled fish dishes, especially swordfish or salmon.

Tzora Cabernet Zinfandel, Jerusalem Hi 2003 ($17.99)
There's been an impressive array of mostly re wines emerging from cooler-climate sites in Is recently, as the country's wine industry moder nizes and U.S.-educated winemakers learn hov to craft quality wines in drought-like condition Produced at higher elevations in a kibbutz in th mountains west of Jerusalem, this flavorful, slig jammy blend of two-thirds cabernet and one-third zinfandel is so spicy, smooth and luscious ripe it begs the question of why more Californi vintners are not blending the two grapes. Delig fully soft with ripe tannins, it'd be ideal with jui meat right off the grill.

Rutherglen Estates Red, Australia, 2004 ($11.99)
A blend of 85 percent shiraz and 15 percent pe sirah (yes, they're growing everything in Austra now), this is one of those inky, opaque-colored palate-coating red wines that's so lush and velv so filled with sweet black-cherry fruit, you can drink it anytime, anywhere. Produced in one of the country's warmer growing regions, it has a edgy, tobacco-like spice in the finish that suits it well to food.

Artesa Tempranillo, Alexander Valley, 20 ($21.99)
Tempranillo from California? This is an amazing sensual taste experience. Rich and spicy, with layers of black-cherry fruit, licorice and clove, i very full bodied and lingering in flavor. If you ca find it, try this with grilled herb-crusted lamb.

Performing Arts: Side-Splitting Shakespeare

Sure, he knew how to craft a tragic tale, but the versatile William Shakespeare also knew how to tickle the funny bone with that quill pen of his. So if you're looking to celebrate spring with some lighthearted laughs, head over to the Boston University Theatre between now and June 11, as the Huntington Theatre Company presents Love's Labour's Lost—one of Will's wittiest. The plot focuses on the King of Navarre and his three young lords, who, worried about being distracted from their studies, swear off women for three years. Of course their oath is put to the test almost immediately, thanks to an unannounced visit from the Princess of France and her three fetching attendants. Attempts by the men to engage the women while staying true to their oath go predictably awry; identities are mistaken; and puntastic wordplay ensues. 264 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-266-0800). www.huntingtontheatre.org. Through June 11. See Web site for performance times. $15-$70. —RL

...gs: Man Bites 'Dog

When we think of a safari, it usually involves images of cruising across the plains in a bad-ass Jeep, dodging packs of lions while firing off a pump-action tranquilizer gun. Well, Eddie Andelman's idea of a safari couldn't be more different. On June 4, the local sports-casting legend is at Suffolk Downs in East Boston to host his annual Hot Dog Safari to benefit the Joey Fund. The event kicks off at 9 am and offers an endless selection of hot dogs, sausages and ice cream from vendors like Ball Park, Boston Hot Dog Company, the Sausage Guy and Kelly's Roast Beef. In addition to the food, visitors can enjoy a live radio broadcast by Andelman and WROR's Loren & Wally, as well as horse racing at the Downs. The day also features a salute to the Safari's grand marshal, former Patriots star and current Pats radio commentator Gino Cappelletti. The Joey Fund works with the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation to support patients and fund cystic fibrosis research. Suffolk Downs, 111 Waldemar Ave., East Boston (800-966-0444). www.hotdogsafari.com. 9 am-4 pm. $10-$15. —RL

Debbie Harry

Music: Back in a Flash

Blondie frontwoman Debbie Harry still isn't the kind of girl who gives up just like that—oh, no. Recently inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Harry and her bandmates are back on tour this summer with the New Cars, for what could be called a true revival performance. The two bands play one night only at the Bank of America Pavilion on June 7, the day after the first New Cars album, It's Alive, hits stores. Both bands have retained original members (guitarist Chris Stein and drummer Clem Burke rejoin Harry; guitarist Elliot Easton and keyboardist Greg Hawkes are back from the Cars), along with some new faces, including Todd Rundgren filling Ric Ocasek's big sunglasses. Both will have new tunes to showcase, but we're guessing the crowd will still scream for "Candy-O" and "Rapture." Bank of America Pavilion, 290 Northern Ave. Boston (617-728-1600). www.bankofamericapavillion.com. $35-$75. —LPK

Radio Flyer

Altman elevates the Home Companion movie.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

I've never really listened to the long-running radio show "A Prairie Home Companion." I've come across it when scanning the dial but have never felt compelled to keep listening; its heartland corniness has always scared me off.

Seeing the new movie A Prairie Home Companion hasn't inspired me to seek out the radio show. At times during the movie, I felt as if I were watching the whitest film ever made—the equivalent of a really ugly quilt crafted by women in unironic beehive hairdos. The movie's appeal lies primarily in the presence of Robert Altman as director.

Altman's experimental, informal style means you never quite know what you're going to get. Will it have the energized unpredictability of his classics, such as M*A*S*H, California Split and Nashville? Or the just-sitting-there dullness of Kansas City, Ready to Wear and The Company, in which the typical Altman background activity is fertile but the foreground is barren?

This time, the results are somewhere in between. But the veteran director's contributions definitely make the movie more interesting. In fact, it's hard to imagine A Prairie Home Companion as anything but an Altman movie.

Altman's trademark overlapping dialogue and ability to juggle the subplots within an ensemble story are in fine display throughout the film. Taking place almost entirely within St. Paul's Fitzgerald Theater, the auditorium from which the radio show has long broadcast, the loose plot finds Garrison Keillor and the rest of the show's cast performing what might be their last program, because their radio station has been bought by a Texas-based conglomerate poised to end its production.

That premise gives the movie a dramatic structure, but it's really just the sort of loose story with which Altman has long been comfortable. It flits between onstage performances and backstage conversations, between such characters as the Johnson Sisters (Meryl Streep and Lily Tomlin) and singing "trail hands" Dusty and Lefty (Woody Harrelson and John C. Reilly), and between comedy and the seemingly more serious concerns of show security chief Guy Noir (Kevin Kline), who becomes infatuated with a mysterious lady in white (Virginia Madsen).

The wide-ranging dressing room conversation by Yolanda (Streep) and Rhonda (Tomlin, an Altman vet from Nashville)—in which the two remaining family members relive the Johnsons' history, for the benefit of Yolanda's morbid teen daughter Lola (Lindsay Lohan)—is prime Altman. The women talk over each other, cut each other off and generally talk as people really do, while Altman's visuals similarly don't seem fussed over. It all gives the scene, which we come back to several times, a naturalism that movies don't often achieve.

We leave that conversation for other "business," like the assistant stage manager (Maya Rudolph) regularly trying to coax gabby Keillor back onstage in time for his cue, Guy (whom Kline amusingly turns into a Clouseau-esque bumbler) pursuing the mystery woman, or other acts (like L.Q. Jones' old-timer, Chuck) performing onstage. We get a sense of all the stories playing out in the theater, and the story gives equal weight to each.

From a distance, it seems as if most of the appealing characters in the movie are not on the radio show. Guy Noir and the duo of Dusty and Lefty are referred to on the radio show, but they're apparently expanded here (in enhancing the trail hands into a singing act, the movie supplies its most entertaining five minutes with their song "Bad Jokes"). The Johnson Sisters are a totally new creation; and, as the Farrelly Brothers' Stuck On You already showed, Streep is a good singer, while the script adds some conflict by making her character a once-jilted girlfriend of Keillor's.

Meryl Streep sings, as Garrison Keillor listens, in A Prairie Home Companion.

So fans of the radio show may be disappointed to see its regular performers basically become wallpaper on which the movie overlays stars. But it's not as if Altman has somehow subverted the show on his own. Keillor wrote the movie and many of the songs (including "Bad Jokes"), and he also shows a self-deprecating sense of humor by making his onscreen persona a well-meaning windbag.

I certainly didn't mind an overlay on the radio show's über-folksiness. The radio-show-within-the-movie's nostalgia is stifling, full of bland bluegrass music and ads for fake products that come off like bad imitations of funnier Bob & Ray ad parodies from decades earlier. So it's quite a surprise when A Prairie Home Companion delivers a post-show epilogue that's actually quite anti-nostalgic. The epilogue's message (enjoy something while you can, then move on when it's over) certainly boosted my opinion of this odd little movie that sometimes is at odds with itself but sometimes is just plain fun. IB turns up.) In movie terms, this is essentially a Hitchcockian wrong-man-wanted thriller, and merely an average one, as the two leads elude authorities who think they're involved in the original murder (and others to follow) and try to uncover the truth. Despite the hefty special effects that often let experts like Hanks share the screen with the historical events they're describing, and despite Hanks himself (who's rather stiff here), Ron Howard's movie can be flat and plodding, and it isn't hard to see its plot twists coming. Anyone looking for more than a decent popcorn movie should look elsewhere. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Prairie Home Companion ★★★
Directed by Robert Altman. Written by Garrison Keillor. With Keillor, Meryl Streep, Lily Tomlin, Kevin Kline, Woody Harrelson, John C. Reilly, Lindsay Lohan, L.Q. Jones and Tommy Lee Jones. Rated PG-13. Opens June 9 at Coolidge Corner.

Friends with Money ★★★

Like her two previous movies, Walking and Talking and Lovely & Amazing, writer-director Nicole Holofcener's latest is slight but wise and enjoyable. In this ensemble tale about a group of 40-ish friends, the title refers to one (played by Jennifer Aniston) being single and struggling in life, financially and figuratively, while the others (including characters played by Frances McDormand, Joan Cusack, Jason Isaacs and Holofcener regular Catherine Keener) are all well-off (financially, at least) and married. On a wider level, though, the comedy is about entering middle age and dealing with diminished expectations and the person you're trying to spend the rest of your life with. Nothing groundbreaking occurs, but everything here is appealing: the smart script, the experienced cast sharing the load, the unpretentious approach and the effective comedy about everyday life. (At Kendall Square.)

Lady Vengeance ★★

After Chan-Wook Park's frenetic, violent, delirious, yet somehow moving Oldboy—which turned out to be a huge DVD hit after its arthouse run—I was really looking forward to his latest. But the last entry in Park's revenge trilogy lost me at about the two-thirds mark. Up until then, Park does a good job building the story of Geum-Ja (Lee Young Ae), a beautiful murderess who, we learn through many flashbacks, didn't commit the kidnapping and murder for which she was incarcerated. In prison she cultivates a reformed, angelic appearance while befriending her cellmates by killing the cellblock bully. When she gets out, she drops the angelic airs and focuses on getting her ex-cellmates to help her take revenge on the former accomplice (Oldboy's Choi Min-Sik) who forced her to falsely confess to the crime that put her behind bars. But, astonishingly, the movie squanders all those flashbacks developing the relationship between the heroine and her prison pals by bringing in a whole other set of people (the parents of the accomplice's victims) when it comes time for the bloody revenge. Not only does this negate a lot of the time expended on flashbacks, but since the movie is told in Park's usual over-the-top style, the caricatured tone can't handle these parents' very real grief. Instead the movie just trivializes it. (Opens June 9 at Kendall Square.)

Guy Pearce is an outlaw in the Aussie western The Proposition.

The Notorious Bettie Page ★★

The Boy Least Likely To finds magic in wide-eyed pop with eccentric accessories.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

The Best Party Ever, the catchy debut from British duo The Boy Least Likely To, conveys a child-like innocence, from its cover of toddler-like drawings to songs laced with glockenspiel and lyrics wary of maturity.

"It's a fear of change and growing up, and just not knowing what's ahead of you," says Jof Owen, who handles the lyrics and vocals, while Pete Hobbs mans the instruments. "It's that fear of being caught between childhood and adulthood. It's like the end of The House at Pooh Corner, the Winnie the Pooh book where Christopher Robin has to go away. He doesn't really want to leave, but he knows he has to."

The Boy Least Likely To has been labeled one to watch.

Owen, in turn, has grown beyond the children's books and radio cassettes of his youth to front an indie-pop group that Rolling Stone recently dubbed one of "10 Artists to Watch."

"It was never a plan that this is what we'd do for a living," Owen, 28, says during a break from recording B-sides at a studio just outside Wendover, the countryside village north of London where he and Hobbs met in their early teens.

"We started out in Pete's bedroom with an eight-track and PC and stuff, and we've upgraded to a new studio space and the neighbors are complaining," he says. "We're a little more organized and professional about things, but it's pretty much the same [process]."

"I was working in a record shop and I was happy," Owen says of the duo's origins. "I thought it was great. I could put a single out every eight months, and that was enough really. We didn't really think about anything beyond that. But with every single, it grew a little bit, and our expectations sort of grew. Then the album came out and went weird."

Such a groundswell reaction was perhaps fitting for a quirky and charming CD that evokes Belle and Sebastian, the Beach Boys and a playroom where acoustic guitar and banjo mingle with glockenspiel, recorder and space-toy synthesizer.

"We'd always collected instruments and they'd sat around, so we put them to good use," Owen says of the whimsical, country-tinged The Best Party Ever. "There's no fantasy or magic in rock," he adds of the pair's stylistic taste. "Every time we saw ourselves nearing a rock cliché, we'd turn the other way."

"I always wanted to be this musician, and it never seemed impossible, it never seemed like an odd thing to be," says the singer, who bears a vague resemblance to actor Steve Buscemi. He recalls one particular meeting with a career advisor. "She asked me what I wanted to be, and I said, 'I want to be a pop star.' And she said, 'Well, maybe you should enroll in this business studies course,' that sort of thing you tell someone when they say they want to be a pop star."

"I'm not really good at anything else," Owen says. "It's not like I could do something else well. I've done other jobs and I'm very bad at them. This is the only one that I've really applied myself to, or been any good at."

Indeed, there's a carefree craftsmanship to ditties like "Paper Cuts" (where Owen sings, "If you hold me up to the light, you can see my broken heart") or "Monsters," about zombie-like careerists "pushing little baby monsters around the shops in prams." Add tunes with titles like "Warm Panda Cola" and "I'm Glad I Hitched My Apple Wagon To Your Star," and it doesn't seem like the stuff of burgeoning pop stardom.

"We're not likely to tred on Christina Aguilera's stage," Owen says—though they did open for heartthrob James Blunt on his recent U.S. tour. "It's weird, pop stars and celebrities are different these days. My idea of a pop star has gotten a bit convoluted or mixed up. I don't know, [my idea] is sort of from the early '80s, when you could get by through making records—like Roddy Frame from Aztec Camera. He made pop records and he was a pop star, but he didn't feel the need to be captured on holiday in his swimsuit."

One might guess Owen would be more at home in a bubble bath than at the beach in a Speedo; or maybe it's just that The Boy Least Like To actually uses a bubble machine onstage. "It usually comes on toward the end, in a magical moment."

Owen and Hobbs, who bubble up at T.T. the Bear's June 12, also benefit from five backup musicians to help cover the disc's sundry instruments in concert. "It's probably a bit more energetic," Owen says. "It's got a bit more balls. But it's definitely in the spirit of the record. People don't come up and say, 'Oh, they rock now.' We just pop loudly." iB

MINI MAY 21–JUNE 20

Before your Mercury ruler moves out of Gemini, gather all the specifications you move ahead on a purely personal matter. Once Mercury gets to Cancer on June 3, ils of domestic life can cancel out plans made for your sole benefit. Oh sure, the still be in Gemini, and you'll probably feel stronger, more creative, perhaps than you've been in a while, but your mind could be elsewhere, like figuring out buy for the house or even thinking about selling the house itself.

easy out—the same day that Mercury enters Mars leaves it for Leo. What's the trade-off? More acuity, less physical stamina, greater curiosity and ess to talk things over, less fuming and fussing—y less of that bossy Martian vibe all the way around. h Venus moving into placid Taurus, whatever n you've felt emanating from your boss or others affect your career should dissipate, or at least h. For the time being, those trials are over.

23–AUGUST 22

nges that'll make a difference: First, the Gemini new ver the Memorial Day weekend will facilitate the flow mation crucial to the progress of your career; and energetic Mars enters Leo on the 3rd. It's been two nce the Warrior marched through your sign, so during t weeks of his transit, use the infusion of bravery and -do to have nips and tucks, body sculpting or dental ne. However, around the Father's Day weekend when ashes into problematic Saturn, stay clear of anything ngerous than dinner with Dad.

GO

UST 23–SEPTEMBER 22

e Gemini new moon zaps your midheaven with fresh and your Memorial Day celebration is history, make u keep an eye out for an opportunity that'll add a t dimension to your career history. That your ng Mercury ruler is also in the sign of the Twins s more than the usual discussion of pros and cons reasons to be justifiably ambivalent about the gig. entering nurturing Cancer on June 3 can mean a m wanting "just the facts, ma'am" to satisfying nger for "more, please."

RA

e to the new, sensually stimulating you. After your uler leaves aggressive Aries on Memorial Day, you're slough that tough-guy veneer for the soft, sweet here that earthy Taurus emits. And because the Bull ur house of sex and other people's money, the inities for getting down could be as abundant as, s notwithstanding, the flowers that bloom in the You also catch a break once Mars starts advocating spend less time working and more time ning colleagues and club members.

ORPIO

BER 23–NOVEMBER 21

h you may think you're locked into your present , you'll be surprised at how differently things look lue-conscious Venus enters your Taurus house of allies rneys on Memorial Day. This annual transit comes just ys before your Mars coruler leaves cuddly Cancer for er realm the Lion rules. Whether or not you're ready ace Leo's lavish lifestyle and exhibitionist tendencies on how badly you want your career to progress—at you're willing to pay for the perks.

ITTARIUS

alf-birthday. Solar Gemini is so chock full of ion ceremonies and celebrations, as well as June s and Father's Day festivities, that it makes sense (to this Centaur) to feel that some of the joy is being beamed our way from the planets (and people) in our house of significant others. A certain amount of outrageousness is to be expected next week around the time that gift-bearing Venus tries to outdo the benefits bestowed by our generous Jupiter ruler. That's when the "lucky" planets have their annual opposition.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22–JANUARY 20

Despite the aggravation you may be getting from acidic Mars in your Cancer house of spouses, you can still enjoy the attention the cosmos are paying to your area of enjoyment and entertainment. Soon enough Mars will move on to Leo and clever Mercury will enter Cancer, so it'll be easier to find out what you need to know about any partnership arrangement. Also, having Mercury in your marriage sign often signals that you're about to hook up with someone who's quite a bit younger or, more startling, a relative.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21–FEBRUARY 18

While you might have a variety of interests, this time of year the focus often shifts to improving your house and garden. Why not get with the planets' program and research how to make your place look better? After artistic Venus enters earthy Taurus on Memorial Day, painting and planting will be more enjoyable. And once pushy Mars gets to Leo, spending hours among the flowers could serve as your refuge from a partner's unwavering demands. It's been two years—have you forgotten what Mars in your marriage house feels like?

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19–MARCH 19

Time to shop. (As if you needed permission.) But while appreciative Venus makes her annual trek through sweet-smelling, color-coordinated, touchy-feely Taurus, why not make the most of the heightened sensitivity to beauty the goddess offers? Since the nosy Gemini sun in your home base can encourage the folks there to ask a lot of annoying questions, Venus' predilection for harmony should even the playing field—especially next week when the sun provokes unpredictable Uranus in your sign. Get ready to explode!

ARIES

MARCH 20–APRIL 19

Finally, it's your time to shine. After a two-year wait, your fiery Mars ruler returns to mighty Leo, where, once again, it'll whet your appetite for extravagant entertainments while showing the world how truly talented you are. How long will this display of exaggerated egotism last? Until Mars enters Virgo on July 22, the day solar Leo begins. Enjoy all the frivolous, fun and risky games you manage to get into, but remember that an abundance of fire energy can spark a conflagration that'll soon rage out of control.

TAURUS

APRIL 20–MAY 20

Sure, holiday time is party time. But don't forget that the Gemini new moon took place in your money house, and now may be the best time to take a fresh look at your assets. By the time the moon is full in Sagittarius on June 11, a financial matter will have come to fruition, or it will have been tabled for the next six months, possibly until the moon is full in Gemini. As an added advantage, your value-conscious Venus ruler will be in your sign from Memorial Day until June 23, and in your Gemini money house until July 18.

Excuse You

To the woman who was very rude to me on her way downhill to the Longwood T stop (I was walking uphill): Either you think you're in possession of the definitive rule book for pedestrian etiquette, or you suffer from a compulsive disorder of some kind. Regardless, your behavior when you shoved me aside was inexcusable. I'm sure that I'll continue to be annoyed about this for the rest of the day, but I take comfort in knowing that your life is probably far more miserable than mine.

—Still Standing

two boys at Gypsy on May 7, the ho knew each other from kinder-: You were the funniest guys I've en at a club. I was the taller of o look-alikes, wearing dark blue ughing at your aerobics improv. I think I've ever laughed that much but dancing! To the taller one g the blue button-up (we shared short dance; unfortunately, I left on to even ask your name): You're o you want to make me laugh more? E-mail me!

Your car , equipped with a rearview , so why not use it? The next ou see a line of seething s bumper to bumper behind et out of their way. And in case too difficult for you to wrap elf-absorbed brain around, s a simple way to remember: If on the highway and you look r right and there's no one in ne next to you, that is where long. It's that simple. So get my way, for Christ's sake.

up in an Irish pub on Dorchester enjoy lightning storms, being nded, taking pictures of the sun ding in the dark. I like walking street when it's less crowded, g on my jacket and ball cap in iddle of storms for a walk and breathing in the rain. My hobbies include dieting, reading about dragons and sipping protein shakes in front of the TV. I don't have an iPod, and I'm not on myspace.com. You'll catch me in line at Avalon. There's not much I can't stand—at least that's what my last dentist told me. I miss living in New York, getting trampled on the subway, eating too late and not sugarcoating things to save people's feelings. I can't remember my last dream, but I never forget those who are close to me. I love the city but hate asphalt fumes. I can't stand the shit Boston radio plays. I don't believe in computer dating or personal ads. I don't believe in scripting life and believe that the best things have happened to me by accident. I'm not cynical or negative when I'm brainstorming, just honest. There's a difference. And there's no catch. E-mail me.

Dunked, but No Score

We chatted at the Dunkin Donuts on State Street on May 8. You: about 5'6", with long, brown hair, dark skin (Middle Eastern or Indian descent) and a stunning smile. Me: 6', blond, athletic (burly), with glasses and a little stubble that day. And I'm stupid, stupid, stupid for not asking for your phone number. We chatted about the weather, but I couldn't believe such a beautiful woman could be available. If you are and want to get to know each other, please e-mail me!

The Waiting Is the Hardest Part

To "Tired and Waiting": I'm a retired restaurant manager, bartender, waiter, prep cook, bus boy, dishwasher and doorman. Sweetheart, as long as you do anything that concerns dealing with the public, you are going to get some people who are not socially, mentally or emotionally enlightened. Take a drive around Boston and watch how our neighbors cut each other off and fail to use their directional signals. The only thing in your power is how you respond to the things that you encounter. And to "Distressed Diner": I'm guessing you have no restaurant experience. When a table makes a waitperson make four trips for four drinks, it's referred to as running a waiter, and it's only done by the most clueless of people. By doing this you're ruining all the other tables' service. There are a rhythm and flow that need to occur so that workers can keep up with the pace. And you should never run, belittle, pick on, order around, or be anything other than nice to someone who touched your food prior to your eating it.

—Been Around the Block

I Spy, Green Eyes

This is for the woman my coworkers call a beautiful, green-eyed lady—the one who's been looking for me at work but hasn't found me yet. Don't stop trying. I know we haven't found one another, but I think I know who you are. Elizabeth, is it you who's been looking for me? I'll bet you read THE IMPROPER; I don't think I have to say how I know this. If it's not you, then to whoever you are: If you haven't found me by the time this runs in the magazine, I hope you read it and just keep trying. I'm there Monday through Friday.

—Curiously Waiting

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery.

So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see!

THE ONLY ONE MISSING WAS OPRAH...

The one party that's guaranteed to make even the most voracious reader feel like an illiterate boob is the Associates of the Boston Public Library's Literary Lights Dinner at the Park Plaza.

Recognizing 11 of New England's most illustrious authors, the evening began with cocktails, continued with dinner at tables decorated with the honored writers' works, and included past honorees—like William Martin, Anita Shreve, Erica Funkhouser and Nathaniel Philbrick—introducing this year's, who included Megan Marshall, Galway Kinnell, Mary McGarry Morris and Haruki Murakami. (If none of these names sounds familiar, you ought to spend more time reading.)

In the audience: board chair Vivian Spiro, former senatorial spouse Joan Kennedy, the erudite Marjie and Bob Kargman, MFA head Malcolm Rogers, arts patrons Leo and Gabriella Beranek, and low-key Back Bay philanthropists Sid and Libby Topol, who listened intently to the fascinating keynote speech delivered by David Gergen, a top advisor to every president since Nixon. (And if you didn't know that, you should read the newspaper more often.)

Among the trenchant remarks about the state of the written word: "These days, every book seems to be about getting into Harvard or rehab," and "Everyone today is either a novelist, a memoirist or a plagiarist."

PASS THE ALKA SELTZER...

They're so unpretentious, you'd never know they were so rich, which is why the McCourt Family Foundation Gala feels more like a really fun wedding than yet another boring black-tie charity gig.

Spotted at the Boston Harbor Hotel were such assorted McCourts as matriarch Kay, her daughter-in-law Ginger with sons Ryan and Trevor (the latter squiring the smokingly hot Alex Butmi de Catman), Terence and his wife, Mary, and assorted high-profile types, including multiple sclerosis activist Rain Pryor (daughter of comedian Richard) and Red Sox legend Bill Lee (who gave Kay grief about one of her sons' owning the L.A. Dodgers).

The recipe for the evening seemed to be: cocktail, laugh, eat something, have another cocktail, and repeat. Needless to say, everyone had a good time while raising serious dough for Alzheimer's and M.S. research, although some of us were wishing we'd had a bit less fun the following morning.

FELLINI WOULD'VE BEEN PROUD...

It was a bit of La Dolce Vita when Young Friends of Save Venice threw their annual hoo-ha at the Ritz-Carlton. The theme was the Venice Film Festival circa 1959, which meant a lot of dark sunglasses and beehive hairdo's, along with a continuous loop of classic Italian films on a big screen. But between flashes of the paparazzi's cameras one could spot cochairs Frederick Ilchman (a curator at the MFA) and Meredith Roy (in several miles of black-and-white taffeta), louche playboy Juan Prieto, photogenic fun couple Maud and Andrew Cabot, polo-playing neurosurgeon Thorvad Norregaard, man-about-town Adam Berger, Gardner museum head honcha Anne Hawley, and one gorgeous young thing who laughed off the rumor that she was dating a man in the midst of a messy divorce by saying, "We're just friends. He dates girls who like him for his money. I date guys for their abs."

At Boston's Gay Men's Chorus: Kathy Kingston, Reuben Reynolds, Brini Maxwell and Bill Casey; Verna Turbulence

ANYONE FOR SHOW TUNES?

For the lucky few, the Crescendo! benefit for the Boston Gay Men's Chorus began and ended in the swanky South End townhouse of Reuben Reynolds and Bill Casey, with a stop in between at the Roxy for an evening of madcap hilarity hosted by cult figure and iconic TV star Brini Maxwell (a cross-dressing hybrid of Martha Stewart and Marlo Thomas).

Present and accounted for: the inimitable Verna Turbulence, bartender/stripper Eric Mitchell, travel poobah Brian Luke, the Bobbsey Babsons, Deborah and Richard, latter-day Paul Lynde Tom Mashberg, the adorable Morty Mollica, and ridiculously sexy Brazilian painter Alexandre Emanuel, to name a mere smattering.

The afterparty took place upstairs, followed by the after-afterparty back at chez Reynolds and Casey, and like any gathering with lots of gay men, there was plenty of witty repartee. For example: the guy who was introduced to another and said, "Hi, Rich, how are you? Or should I say, 'Hi, how rich are you?'" while another greeted a friend with: "Is that purple lipstick or just too much red wine?"

Punk rock infiltrated Symphony Hall the Opening Night of the Pops, wh Elvis Costello joined conductor Ke Lockhart to prove that when worlds c lide, sometimes the sound is sublime.

Spotted in the hall: eminent news anch John Henning, aviation mogul D Schwinn, Cambridge chatelaine and f mer ambassador Swanee Hunt and h husband, composer/conductor Char Ansbacher, the überphilanthropic Jo and Diddy Cullinane, and one man w explained his wife's absence by saying, "S doesn't leave the house if the humidity over 75 percent."

Meanwhile, another snippet of conv sation included someone saying, "He's t up in Latvia," to which someone else sponded, "That sounds kinky." But t evening's funniest remark came fr Costello, who dedicated his symphon version of A Midsummer Night's Dream any woman who's ever found herself love with an ass." IB

WAY OFF BASE

As an avid IMPROPER fan, I usually enjoy the comedic dating guides. However, your recent "undercover" article, "A Gal's Guide to Fenway" (May 31), was just too much. It gave the idea that women don't like baseball, and if we do, it should be for the purpose of getting men. Your "anonymous authors" just fed into the stereotype that women shouldn't like sports for sports' sake. The article was classist as well—making the assumption that women care how much a man makes based on where he sits at Fenway. It was a disappointment to see in a magazine such as the IMPROPER.

—PARDIS SAFFARI
Wayland

BOO, HISS

Whatever happened to going to Fenway Park to see a baseball game ("A Gal's Guide to Fenway")? Your writers talk about Fenway as the most revered stadium of its kind with drama, history and hallowed ground. When did the park become a singles bar? The only singles the fans should be worried about are the ones being hit on the field. If your female readers have to familiarize themselves with the rules of the game, then they don't belong there at all. And these people you're encouraging to go will only increase the percentage who don't belong, which is why a ticket to Fenway is the highest-priced in baseball. The park is filled with too many people there because it's a place to be seen, and not enough fans. I just wonder when the park will start serving a Cosmopolitan.

NEW IN TOWN

Barely Legal

With a half century under its belt and a formula that obviously works, Legal Sea Foods is stepping out with a new offshoot that breaks away from everything the restaurant is known for. At LTK Bar and Kitchen, Legal's new joint set to open in South Boston in June, high-tech options abound and the vibe is fun, funky and gussied-down. Years ahead in terms of concept dining, LTK (which stands for Legal Test Kitchen) boasts the sorts of ultramodern features you'd see on The Jetsons.

Internet access is a given. But there's more: Small plasma screens hanging on walls and columns throughout the dining room let you peruse LTK's menu, surf the Web or watch TV. Through wireless ordering devices, you can send drink requests directly to the bar and settle the tab at the table—no waiting for waitstaff. The 21st century's answer to the tableside jukeboxes of yesteryear are wireless iPod docks, which let you create the soundtrack to your dinner right from your own iPod.

LTK seems to take the "test" part of its name literally, as each table is stocked with a box of SAT-inspired forms (and regulation No. 2 pencils) for salad ordering. Diners follow instructions and fill in the circles that correspond to their choices of salad, toppings ("electives") and ingredients ("extra credit") like scallops, swordfish and crabmeat.

Which brings us to the food. With all the technological bells and whistles, it's easy to forget we're talking about a restaurant. LTK's menu is less seafood-intensive than you'd expect (though Legal's signature clam chowder is here) and has Asian influences. It's broken into descriptive categories, including Bare (items like oysters and maki rolls, $8.95); Nosh (appetizers like tuna sashimi with chili-garlic vinaigrette, $10.95); Simmer (soups); Nibble (small plates like grilled shrimp nachos, $10.95); Refresh (salads like Asian almond salad, $10.95); and Comfort (burgers and wraps).

Most entrées (called Exhilarate), like grilled skirt steak frites, are priced in the teens. One exception is the "angry lobster" ($23.95), served with chili-garlic, cilantro and black-bean chow-foon noodles. Like the menu, the wine list is broken down in an unusual way (in this case by flavor profiles), and all by-the-glass wines come in a goblet-cum-measuring cup with markings for two, four or six ounces, letting you choose how much to taste.

A note to Sox fans: Jonathan Papelbon and Coco Crisp both live in luxury apartments above LTK, so Sox sightings are likely. 225 Northern Ave., Boston (617-330-7450). Open seven days a week, 9 am–about midnight. —EG

INNER VIEW

Lynda Morgenroth

On June 23, Lynda Morgenroth, a longtime contribut Boston Globe writer, reads from her book Boston Firs which tells of Boston inventions, innovations and c ations, at Porter Square Books in Cambridge.

Improper Bostonian: Why did you decide to write a book about Boston firsts?

Lynda Morgenroth: I wish I could claim it was my id but it wasn't. One of my editors had moved here fr New York, kept stumbling upon different Boston fir and recognized that this really was a cradle of inno tion. Beacon Press then called me to help put the i into book form.

IB: What's the most surprising bit of information you u covered?

LM: That the first madam in America was from Bost I think of Boston as a much more puritanical socie also found it surprising that there was so much m opposition to the first organ transplant. It was very si lar to the current opposition to stem cell research.

IB: Was the least surprising fact that the Boston cream pie was invented here?

LM: Maybe, but subjects like the cream pie turned to be just as juicy as the others. The cream pie st was a great lesson in democracy. It started out a recipe for a fancy French dessert, but over time Betty Crockers of the land democratized it by cut corners and taking short cuts. They took a Fre dessert and made it into something that can be p chased in cake-mix form.

IB: Of all the firsts you uncovered, which do you think most significant?

LM: Probably the story of the legislation involving sc segregation that led to Brown v. Board of Educatio 1954.

IB: Boston was the home of the first YMCA, so would it be fair to say that Boston should be held responsible for the Village People?

LM: I'm speechless.... I don't think we can be held responsible for them. They were just an accident.

A Trio of Trunk Shows

Three trunk shows hit Boston in the next few weeks, giving shoppers the chance to see all sorts of designer duds, from jewelry to yoga fashions to bridesmaid dresses. First, Priscilla of Boston hosts a week-long trunk show June 18–25, in honor of Bridesmaid's Week. Priscilla's show lets you see new styles and those not typically available at this branch and offers discounts on bridesmaid and cocktail dresses from its own collection, plus designers including Waters and Waters and Thread.

Next, 33 Restaurant and Lounge brings in 12 designers to showcase their latest looks at a party to benefit the Kids Can Cook Organization. On June 20, 5:30–9 pm, you can shop for everything from accessories to workout gear while sipping cocktails and sampling hors d'oeuvres. And if you get shopped-out, you can try sample spa treatments like head massages and mini-manis. Admission is $10.

Finally, Guava Girls Tees hosts a launch party and trunk show at Shake the Tree in the North End. Pastry Palace

Excelsior's new muddling concoctions

Truly Delicious... He's already served up pastry perfection to clients like actor James Garner and the elder President Bush. This July, chef Jörg Amsler will be here to serve you at his new Truly Jörg's Patisserie at the Hotel Commonwealth. Various types of high-end European pastry are the obvious draw to Jörg's new digs, but the shop will also feature everything from muffins, croissant breakfast sandwiches and quiches, to pâtés, dessert wines and handmade gelato. Starting in early July, Truly Jörg's will be open from 7 am–10 pm, seven days a week, and will also be a prime al fresco spot with its outdoor patio seating. www.trulyjorgs.com.

Jörg's buddha-head cake

Muddling Mavens... If you're a fan of muddled drinks (cocktails flavored with freshly mashed ingredients) and/or getting boozed up on Sunday and Monday nights, we've got good news. Excelsior is offering a make-your-own Muddling Bar from 4:30–9 pm on Sundays and Mondays for the summer. In a separate area set up off to the right of the main bar, the Muddling Bar–tenders help you select a combination of ingredients like mint and basil leaves, honey tangerines, champagne mangoes, strawberries, raspberries and blueberries—and then will actually do the hardcore muddling for you as you look on. Drinks are $12 each. 272 Boylston St., Boston (617-426-5684).

The Living Room's "healthy" cocktail

To Health!... This summer, the Living Room is making martini-drinking good for you—or at least healthier—with two additions to their cocktail list that could have even the most health-conscious Bostonians stopping to smell the drunkenness. First is the Açai Martini, a mix of Skyy Berry Vodka, sour mix and açai berries. Açais, gathered from the Brazilian forest, contain more antioxidants than blueberries and pomegranates, and help prevent premature aging, heart disease and certain cancers. The next addition, for all the soy sippers out there, is the Bubble Tea Martini, made with a blend of soy milk, pearl tapioca and Absolut Vanilla. The drinks each cost $10. 101 Atlantic Ave., Boston (617-723-5101).

Infusion Explosion... It's hard to be that to enjoy one of Robert Fathman's creative cocktail infusions, you'd have to make the trek over to one of two restaurants, Azure or Clio, to get them. But that's no longer the case thanks to the recent release of Infusionique, Fathman's original line of small-batch, hand-infused spirits. Fathman launches the collection with three flavors: Infusionique Bourbon (Kentucky bourbon, fresh figs, vanilla bean and cinnamon); Infusionique Rum (Virgin Islands rum, lemon, orange and ginger); and Infusion Angelique Tequila (100% agave tequila with fresh mint, lime and Hawaiian pineapple). You'll find the drinks at restaurants like Red Rock Bistro, Union Bar & Grill, and you can buy them by the bottle ($ Brix Wine Shop in the South End.

KNOW THY ENEMY

Pretending to be a Yankees fan reveals a chilling fact: They're everywhere among us.

I walk into the Cask 'N Flagon two hours before game time for the rubber match of the latest Red Sox–Yankees series at Fenway. The place is packed, a sea of red and blue hats emblazoned with the letter "B." I sigh and pull on my own hat and jersey. The name stretching proudly across my back: "Damon."

What the hell is wrong with me? Do I have a death wish? Maybe, but I also have a theory: Since the Sox won the World Series, the Red Sox fan's attitude toward the Yankees has changed drastically. The Yankees logo no longer antagonizes me the way it once did. Now, when I see a Yankees fan, I still think "screw you," but without the malice I'd once reserved for their kind.

So here I am at Ground Zero for Red Sox Nation, mere feet from the Green Monster, flaunting my Damon shirt like an obnoxious Yankees fan (pardon the redundancy). Will my countrymen beat me down, or proffer tolerance?

Minutes after donning the hateful getup, a paunchy guy at the bar punches me lightly on the shoulder, motions to my jersey and says, "Really rubbing their noses in it, aren't you?" Their noses—ah ha, a Yankees fan. But he's not wearing any identifying gear. Interesting. I wonder how many other undercover New Yorkers are in the crowd?

One guy at a table in the corner is making absolutely no attempt to blend in. He's loud, proud and wearing a Babe Ruth jersey. "How's that T-shirt treatin' ya?" he yells. "Great!" I call back, wearing my best smug Jeter facial expression—lips upturned in a faint smile, eyes squinting a bit like I'm actually physically blinded by my own brilliance. It's a good thing there are no mirrors nearby, or I might try to punch myself in the face.

I sit down at a table, and within minutes the Bambino is at my side holding Jager shots. Good God, he wants to bond. He tells me he has three grand on the over—tonight, 10 and a half runs. I loathe Jager but do it anyway, lest I blow my cover, but I retaliate by sending him the most disagreeable shot on the planet when you've been slugging beers and devouring wings all night: tequila. "Grab a lime," I tell one of Ruth's cronies as the waitress hands him his glass. "We don't need no training wheels," he says, and knocks back his shot, with only a grimace for a chaser. Everyone else follows suit and promptly makes the sour, disgusted tequila face—except me. My shot was ginger ale. Stupid Yankees fans.

As the game begins, I have to activel force myself to cheer against the Red So It's awful, I tell you. It feels so wrong an dirty to boo Manny when he cranks a hom run in the first inning, and to cheer whe the Spanks take a 4-2 lead in the top of th second. Meanwhile, I'm hoping you can get herpes from high-fives, because congra ulatory Yankees fans are coming out of th woodwork. I had no idea there were s many moles at the Cask 'N Flagon, and ho could I, given that none of them fly the co ors? One honorable-looking bespectacle fellow pulls down the collar of his sweatsh as he walks past, revealing pinstripes unde neath. Babe Ruth Guy may be the Yanke fan archetype—loud, cocky, in-your-face but at least he's not a wuss, unlike the oth 15 Yankees fans I've met tonight.

Ironically for them, subjects of the Ev Empire apparently have nothing to fear the heart of Boston. All night, no matt how jerky I act, the Sox faithful are b nign. The closest I come to getting heckl is when a Sox fan walking past clocks getup and says, "That's OK. I'm not goi give you any crap." I turn around to sh him the name on my back. "How 'ab now?" I ask. I'm begging for a beatdo "That guy's a [bleepin' bleep]" he says walks away. Amazing. Good people, Sox fans are. Good people.

By the bottom of the fifth inning, I c stand it any more. This blue hat is probi leeching dye into my brain that'll cause to change my name to Vinny and habitua shout things like, "26 to one!" and "C owner cares enough about the fans not to good players get away." I pull off my Yank apparel and walk out the door—it's look like the Sox are going to lose this one. been treated with more graciousness th deserve all night long, but unlike Be Williams, I know when to quit. iB

Save Fenway… Wait, I mean don't.

The players are great, but the park isn't even close.

I hate Fenway Park. Wow, it feels good to finally type that out loud.

Now if you're one of those weirdos who still drives around with a "Save Fenway" bumper sticker on your station wagon, you probably think I'm an idiot. Well, I am an idiot, but it has nothing to do with my hatred for Fenway Park.

I won't waste much space talking about Fenway's brutal conditions, because that's undebatable, and has been covered before. But I'll say this: Thank god that I'm only 5'10". My buddy B is about 6'4", and when we go to games together, he looks more out of place than Lindsay Lohan at an all-you-can-eat buffet. I always make him sit to my right (my seats are on the first base line), because otherwise, his knees—painfully tucked into the two inches of Fenway leg room—would obstruct my view of the game. No, my hatred of watching games at this park goes much further than simple discomfort.

First off, Fenway needs Beer Men, because it's almost impossible to get a beer without missing half an inning. To put it another way, say you take a date to the game and shell out $60 apiece for a pair of tickets. That breaks down to about $6.50 for each half inning. If you and your date each drink three beers over the course of the game, not only are you spending $39 on beer, but you've also missed another $19.50 worth of game action. Do they think people will get drunker if they can get a beer without leaving their seats? Couldn't you replace the poor dudes who walk around selling ridiculous foam fingers? I've never seen anyone purchase a foam finger at a Red Sox game, and if they did—and if said "they" was a male—I hope he'd quickly get slapped by anyone sitting in his general vicinity.

My next beef is with the scoreboard; it's a disgrace. For a player's first at bat you see his full season stat line; everything from average and home runs to walks, on-base percentage and stolen bases. That's what fans want to see. But after that, everything just goes to hell. The second time through the line up, the right side of the scoreboard lists what each guy has done so far that game, and that's it. Would it be so hard to get some sort of scrolling graphics that combine all sorts of stats? And don't even get me started on the little fun facts they show underneath the player's head shots. You think they could change those up a little? For the past three seasons the only thing they've had on Trot Nixon is that he hit his first major league home run in Detroit against Jeff Weaver. That's great, but who care This year hasn't been any better. Did I kno that Kevin Youkilis and Mark Loretta we All-Americans at Cincinnati and North western, respectively? Maybe not in Apr but here in June, I think I get it. Or ho about when the Orioles came to town and learned that Kevin Millar was playing h first season in Baltimore after spending th last three years in Boston? If the Sox wan I'd gladly—free of charge—sit in the co trol booth every game and provide fans wi information that won't make them want voluntarily chug a pint of ammonia.

There's only room for one more com plaint: The sound system. Back in the da and to a lesser extent now, there was not ing scarier than when the Sox were down a run in the top of the ninth at Yankee St dium. You'd hear Metallica's "Enter San man" blasting, the crowd would go a solutely nuts and Mo Riviera would trot o of the bullpen. Right then, you knew t game was over. I love Papelbon's entry so "Bodies" by Drowning Pool. In fact, bef taking my girlfriend to a game last wee told her, "Papelbon's got this song he co out to and it's awesome! The crowd g nuts and he's so pumped." What happe at the game? Paps came out of the bull to a muffled mess and we could hardly h a thing. It took the steam right out of park's collective Papelboner. Maybe time for a set of speakers that work be than a six-year-old girl's Fisher-Pr Karaoke Machine.

I don't feel like I'm asking too much h but, you know, maybe I'm wrong. After it's hard work making sure your fans h fun at the park, especially when yo spending so much time in the research tracking down what Kevin Millar's beer to the last few seasons. IB

BY JOHN D. SPOON

Fathers and Sons

A look at the wit and wisdom of dear old dad

Along with clashes of civilizations, clashes between fathers and sons are eternal, most likely going back even before God and Abraham. Freud believed that one of the basic truths in life was the struggle of sons to surpass their fathers. Even if there's great love between them, the son has to beat the father into the ground, metaphorically of course.

A friend said to me recently, "My generation had tough fathers who saw no need to be buddies to their kids. They were dictators—sometimes benevolent, mostly not. My dad would occasionally spank me with his belt, when he thought I'd crossed a certain line. This was accepted by all of my family. The biggest indignity was that he would say, 'Get me my strap.' It wasn't enough that I got whupped. I had to fetch the goddamn weapon." He smiled. "Now, it's the opposite: The kids whup the father—emotionally, of course. They run the house." I feel his pain.

My father was full of aphorisms and advice, but smart enough to know that I wouldn't appreciate them until later in life. He also knew that this would apply particularly to matters of the heart. No one listens to parents in this regard. A few years after college I was dating someone my parents thought would be disastrous to my long-term emotional health. So my father dragooned a charming Hungarian banker, who was living in Boston with his wealthy Brahmin wife. "This is a man of the world," my dad told me. "He's seen it all. He wants to take you to lunch to discuss various things you should know."

The banker resembled Goldfinger in the James Bond novel: hefty, a slight accent, worldly and cynical, as a Mittel Euro should be. "You know, dear boy," he said, "you could fall in love with a thousand women, from here to California. Why restrict yourself to one person, especially when you are so young? You have to be open for experience."

"My father worries too much," I said.

The banker hailed the waiter. Another vino. "I'm on my third wife," he said. "If I lived in Europe, I'd have one wife and a mistress. America is so hopelessly middle class."

"This sounds more about you than me."

"Ah," he answered, sipping his wine. "Your father wanted me to step in. He is wise enough to know a son never listens to a father until it's too late."

"You can tell my father to relax. I'm not getting married."

The banker smiled. "Fathers don't lieve sons any more than sons believ thers. Even if polite, a mutual enemy."

"What if she's very rich?" I asked.

He gave his knowing smile. "If she rich, we would not be having this lun

A British doctor laughed and told "My folks shipped me off to boar school at age 11. My father rarely talk me at all, but the night before I lef took me for a turn in the garden; it awkward. And this is all he said: 'W the older boys want to take you for a of squash—don't go.'"

My favorite father story sums up complex relationship between father sons. A friend had been given a Volk gen Beetle during his junior year in lege. My friend's dad was extremely t a father demanding perfection. In past, the son could seldom use the f car. He was washing his new VW i driveway one day when his father out of the house to watch. Soroff ON

DAVID MUGAR

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Civic-minded philanthropist David Mugar, the man behind Boston's nationally televised 4th of July celebration, was born in Watertown and moved to Belmont, where he attended the Belmont Hill School. He left Babson College during his senior year and went to Cornell's School of Food Management to study the supermarket business. From the age of 14, he worked part-time at Star Market, the chain founded by his father, and as an adult, Mugar joined the company, spending a year as a meat cutter, a year as a night manager, and a year and a half managing a store. He's now chairman and CEO of Mugar Enterprises and the owner of six New England shopping centers, a co-owner of the Mandarin Oriental Hotel and Residences, Blackstone Ventures and several other companies and real estate developments. He's also chairman of the board of Brownfields Recovery Corporation. Most famously, however, he founded (and for 27 years was the sole sponsor) of the 4th of July Boston Pops concert and fireworks display on the Esplanade. He serves as the executive producer. Named one of the city's 100 most influential people of the 20th century by the Boston Business Journal, he's a trustee of the WGBH Foundation and Boston 4 Celebrations. The father of three, he lives in Boston and Cotuit.

Jonathan Soroff: So are you a Yankee Doodle Dandy, or what?

David Mugar: [Laughs] No. I'm half Yankee and half Armenian, so maybe I qualify for the Yankee part. Hopefully I'm not a dandy.

JS: Is the 4th of July your favorite holiday?

DM: Yes.

JS: Favorite thing to eat on the 4th of July?

DM: It's usually a sausage from one of the carts. I love to get one with peppers and onions, and it just runs down your chin.

JS: Best place to watch the fireworks?

DM: Probably from a boat, but there certainly are great locations on the shoreline, including the roof of the building we've always used, 100 Beacon St. We can't use it anymore, because it's been sold to a developer to become luxury condos, so we don't have a location for the party. From having looked down for the last 33 years onto all the rooftops, we know that they're all taken in Beacon Hill and Back Bay.

JS: How much do the fireworks cost?

DM: The fireworks themselves cost approximately a couple of hundred thousand dollars, and then there's the site by the river, which requires us to set the fireworks off from barges, so there's the cost of those and the tugboats and getting everything in place, and the security. So the other costs connected to putting on the show are at least another hundred thousand dollars. In total at least $300,000.

> "THERE'S NO QUESTION I'M A BEHIND-THE-SCENES TYPE OF PERSON. I DON'T LIKE STEPPING OUT FRONT."

JS: Favorite firework?

DM: Well, the most common is called a chrysanthemum, and I like those, but I love the weeping willow shells. They're beautiful. The way our pyrotechnician, Eric Tucker, scores them into the music, with the slower numbers or a sentimental piece, it can be very moving.

JS: So do you keep a private stash of M-80s and bottle rockets?

DM: Why, Jonathan, how could you ask such a question? [Laughs]

JS: Are you moving the fireworks show to South Boston or Dorchester?

DM: That's a tough one. By necessity, it looks like at some point in the future, we're going to have to vacate, temporarily at least, the Esplanade, and internally we've chosen Moakley Park [in South Boston] as the best place to go. We've started talking to political leaders and neighborhood groups. It's probably going to be quite a few years before we'll move, but we haven't done all our homework yet.

JS: One adjective to describe Arthur Fiedler?

DM: I'd have to say brilliant. He knew exactly how to take himself right to the edge and yet never go over it. For example, he introduced Beatles music to the Pops, and he pulled it off. He was able to push the envelope musically without becoming shlocky. He was the Boston Pops for half a century and he personified what a conductor should look like to an audience.

JS: And now we've got Keith Lockhart, who's one of the city's great human treasures and I suspect he might be part Keebler elf.

DM: [Laughs] Keith is absolutely a treasure and also brilliant, in very different ways. His ability to communicate, both through music and verbally, with an audience, is very unusual, if not extraordinary.

JS: Is there one thing you'd like to be recognized for?

DM: I think that I've always felt an obligation to give back. Monetarily is in some ways the easiest of all, and I'm not putting down what I've done, but it's very easy to write a check. The people who have my greatest respect are those who give of their lives and their time, who volunteer to help others. That I think is commendable.

JS: Do you hate it when people recognize you?

DM: I'm not comfortable with it. It's flattering, to a degree, but usually I'm on the run to do something and it can be a distraction. There's no question I'm a behind-the-scenes type of person. I don't like stepping out front.

JS: Why do you love Boston so much?

DM: It's not the buildings. It's not the quirky road patterns. It's not a lot of the physical aspects, the bricks and cement. I think that like with anything in life it comes down to the people, and the one word I think I'd use to distinguish Bostonians from most other cities, if not all other cities, in America is passion. For some reason, it's like we're born with built-in Where there's smoke there's a great barbecue. Here's how to make your own backyard bash one to remember.

BY ETHAN GILSDORF

Like trichinosis infesting rancid pork, two white-hot lies permeate cookout culture.

The first is that women don't know squat about grilling, whether it's cooking a Kobe steak or a lowly hot dog. We'll char-broil that chauvinist pig in a moment.

Meanwhile, let's dispel fairy tale number two: that Northeasterners wouldn't know a barbecued beef brisket if they slept with one. Actually, there's some truth to the myth of regional BBQ cluelessness, which largely boils down to terminology. Folks 'round these parts make the mistake of using "grill" and "barbecue" interchangeably. Sometimes they just lump them both into the catch-all category "cookout."

But they're different ways of cooking. The essence of grilling is speed, over direct flame, using high heat between 300 and 500 degrees. The barbecue process is another beast: slow-paced, infusing meat with fragrant wood smoke—mesquite, hickory, apple, maple or cherry—at temperatures of 200–250 degrees over several hours.

"Indirect heat is key. You don't want flame touching the meat when smoking," says Scott Gubitose, manager of Arlington's Blue Ribbon Barbecue.

Barbecue joints like Blue Ribbon and Somerville's trail-blazing RedBones have cleared the air, one dumb Yankee at a time. Bostonians are finally catching on, insisting on wood-grilled food and trying their hands at home-cooked BBQ. "Now you can go into a Home Depot and get a smoker," says Gubitose. "Five years ago you wouldn't be able to do that."

As for the first myth, consider it debunked. "Women have cooked over an o flame far longer than anyone else," says Kansas City–based Judith Fertig, coautho several cookbooks, including The BBQ Queens' Big Book of Barbecue, published Boston-based Harvard Common Pr Fertig says that with the advent of el tric appliances in the 1950s, Mrs. John Public moved indoors, and week grilling became the domain of men. womenfolk have gradually reclaimed hearth (albeit a propane-fueled one), 73 percent of them now say to th selves, "You go grill, girl."

Finally, this primal truth—meat + = good—is within everyone's rea Tarzan or Jane, north or south of Mason-Dixon line. So hold onto y pulled pork. We're gonna tell y'all it's done.

IT'S YOUR PARTY

Aside from the host donning a cowboy hat or adopting a temporary drawl, mood enhancers definitely benefit a backyard bash.

"When people entertain outside, they get paper plates and plastic cutlery, but they don't have a theme," says Kansas City–based barbecue guru Judith "BBQ Queen" Fertig. She offers these antidotes to humdrum hot-dog-and-hamburger, beer-in-the-washtub cookouts.

1. Urban Chic. Use white tablecloths and candles, with stainless steel or chrome cutlery, candleholders and serving utensils. Serve grilled appetizers on white platters. Arrange pots of architectural plants like stands of bamboo or ornamental grasses around the outdoor room. The drink? Martinis.

2. Tropical. Use tropical prints on tablecloths. Find new, disposable (and renewable-resource) bamboo plates and leaf-shaped platters for serving. Decorate with pots of bougainvillea or tropical indoor plants. The drink? Margaritas or a rum-based punch.

3. New England Farmhouse. Throw old quilts over the tables. Serve food on blue-and-white-speckled tinware. Mass geraniums in rustic baskets. The drink? Spiked lemonade.

4. Tuscan Villa. Use earth-toned colors for tablecloths—amber, olive, russet or grape. Choose terracotta or glazed earthenware for serveware, and flowers in yellows, oranges and salmon. The drink? Italian wines.

5. All-American. Bring out the red (geraniums), white (bistro-style serving platters) and blue (flower baskets). The drink? Cold beer.

THE GEAR

Gas or charcoal? Grill or smok Like buying any product, when it co to grills and smokers, option overload problem. So it helps to identify para ters. THE GRUB

The how-tos of grilling and smoking—and how to avoid pork chips

Andy Husbands has a few grilling secrets. One: Don't use a lot of marinades, esp high-acid vinaigrettes, which overtenderize meat to the point of mush. "I like t ural flavors of the meat," he says. For the best cuts, like tenderloin or sushi-grade simple salt-and-pepper seasoning is enough. What creates flavor is the "Maillar tion"—simple sugars and amino acids chemically changed by charring and caram the crust. High heat sears the surface and seals in the juices.

Creating both direct and indirect heat zones on the cooking surface, by turn one burner or pushing coals to one side, is a key tactic. After searing, "You cont cook, but put [the meat] to the side," suggests chef Tindaro LoSurdo, gas grillm Smith & Wollensky. "If you leave it on too long, the juices just run away." A on thick steak cooked rare takes three to four minutes each side, seven minu medium, and nine minutes for well done. "You can grill anything," LoSurdo say sters, shrimp, potatoes: It's the ultimate tool." Hard cheeses, avocados and peac also grillable.

are served with lime wed

with sticks of oak and hickory. "It burns hotter, faster and cleaner," he says. The method's not technically smoking, but the hardwood imparts aromatic flavors that compressed briquettes, giving off harmful chemical fumes, can't muster.

A basic kettle charcoal grill runs $35–$150. Other low-end grill options are electric or wood pellet–fueled. Kamado grills like Big Green Egg have ceramic fire boxes, and some people swear by them. For smokers, you can splurge on an 1,800-pound Lang smoker rig, which Husbands tows around to barbecue cook-offs. (His team, iQue BBQ, is ranked No. 1 in New England, and No. 10 in the U.S.) A $50 charcoal-powered water smoker also does the job.

Competitive barbecuers use only wood- or charcoal-fueled products. But for those who'd rather not play with fire for every cookout, gas is the answer. "It's about surface area and BTU output," says Steve Sheinkopf, sales/marketing director for Yale Appliance + Lighting of Boston. A minimum of 36,000 BTUs (combined among the burners) is recommended for proper meat searing. Yale sells only top brands, like stainless steel Lynx, Viking and DCS grills, which run as much as $6,000. But a few hundred dollars can still get you a basic gas unit by a reputable brand like Weber.

Essential accessories include a grill cover; barbecue tools like long-handled tongs, a brush for basting, a grill fork, skewers and a wire brush; an instant-read thermometer; a grill pan or grill wok to cook smaller items; a chimney starter for igniting charcoal; and a smoker box for holding wood chips. But as with any hobby, accessorizing can get out of barbecue cooking, meats are coated with a dry rub of spices, salt and sugar, then -smoked next to, but not over, a low fire. Foods become infused with wood ke—that's what cooks them, not direct flame. To keep meat from drying out, a pan ater, cider or beer, placed between the heat source and the meat racks, saturates moked food with moisture (steam from water-logged wood chips accomplishes ame thing). Brisket and pork butt, which can take eight to 15 hours, benefit from ng, says Judith Fertig. Glazing with barbecue sauce is done only during the last 0 minutes of cooking.

en without a commercial smoker, home grillers can try a few tricks to add gen- BBQ flavor. In a gas or charcoal grill, put items above indirect heat. Place pre- ed chunks of wood in a metal container or foil package punched with holes "as to a direct heat source as possible and let them smolder," Fertig says. "People in Northeast might use maple kindling or dried corn cobs." Wood chips can also be ered directly on an open fire (but never on gas grill burners, as they'll clog the in- s). Gas-cooking a huge slab of meat like a rack of ribs will cost a fortune in ane, but fish can be smoked in an hour; chicken in one-and-a-half to two hours; shrimp or goat cheese in 30–45 minutes.

s for safety, the obvious (but not always followed) advice is to keep any grill away from s, porches and balconies—10 feet from buildings is a good rule of thumb. Also, keep a xtinguisher handy, and never leave the grill unattended. Barbecued neighbor: bad!

RedBones also on-site cooking. And Husbands will even drag his smoker chez vous and, for a , camp overnight and cook you a whole pig. MAKE NO MIS-STEAK

Andy Husbands observes the rules of good grilling.

Tindaro LoSurdo

Pork chops or chips? Artic char or hard and charred? Steak tips or tasteless sticks? Chefs Andy Husbands and Tindaro LoSurdo tell you how not to devastate that gorgeous cut of meat by avoiding these common grilling mistakes.

1. Oil overload

Basting with too much oil or BBQ sauce causes "flare ups"—and extra carbon. "People see the flame and think it's good," says Husbands. "But that residue of soot is bitter." Use sauces sparingly, says LoSurdo, and try oils with a high smoking point, like grapeseed or peanut.

2. Cold treatment

"The key to any grilling is to get it hot," says LoSurdo. Preheat a gas grill for 15 minutes before using; a wood or charcoal fire takes 45 minutes to reach maximum temp.

3. Black out

"Grilling is about speed and heat," Husbands says. Sear it on the outside, but don't overcook. Create an indirect heating zone away from the gas flame or coals, and move food there to finish cooking before it turns into briquettes.

4. Spatula spazzing

"You need to have patience," says Husbands. Grill on each side only once; don't press down on it or cut into it. Bigger cuts of beef, lamb or pork (thicker than an inch) are best for smoking; for a grilled effect, sear on the grill to caramelize the surface, but finish them off in the oven, LoSurdo suggests.

5. No rest

"What happens to the meat when you cook it is it winds up and gets tighter," Husbands says. "You want to let it rest," he adds, before carving it up. Give meat five minutes of peace, off the grill. "This allows the juices to come back to the center of the meat," says LoSurdo. Then, dig in.

JUDITH FERTIG'S GRILLED NIBBLES

Grilled or smoked meat may be the main event at any cookout—just don't forget the munchies. Skip cheese and crackers and bowls of chips, and impress guests with these BBQ Queen hors d'oeuvres easily prepared fireside as appetites (and the grill) warm up.

1. Grilled shellfish in the shell

Place oysters, clams and mussels in their shells on a grill rack over high heat. Cover and grill until the shells open. Discard shellfish whose shells don't open. Serve with a great sauce.

2. Grilled shellfish on skewers

Scallops and shrimp look and taste great on ordinary bamboo skewers (soak the skewers in water for 30 minutes before assembling and grilling). Or branch out with sugar cane spikes, campfire sticks, lemongrass stalks or sturdy rosemary branches.

3. Mini sandwiches

Grill up miniature beef or lamb burgers and serve with your favorite toppings on tiny buns.

4. Pizza on the grill

Flatten a disk of pizza dough, and brush both sides with olive oil. Grill the round of dough directly on the grill grate until the dough starts to bubble like a pancake. Turn and grill the other side, then add fresh toppings like tomato, basil and grated cheese, or caramelized onion and brie. Place in a warm spot—but not over the fire—until the cheese melts, then serve.

5. Grilled flatbread

The easiest! Brush pita rounds with olive oil and grill both sides until you have good grill marks. Serve with prepared hummus and other Middle Eastern dips.

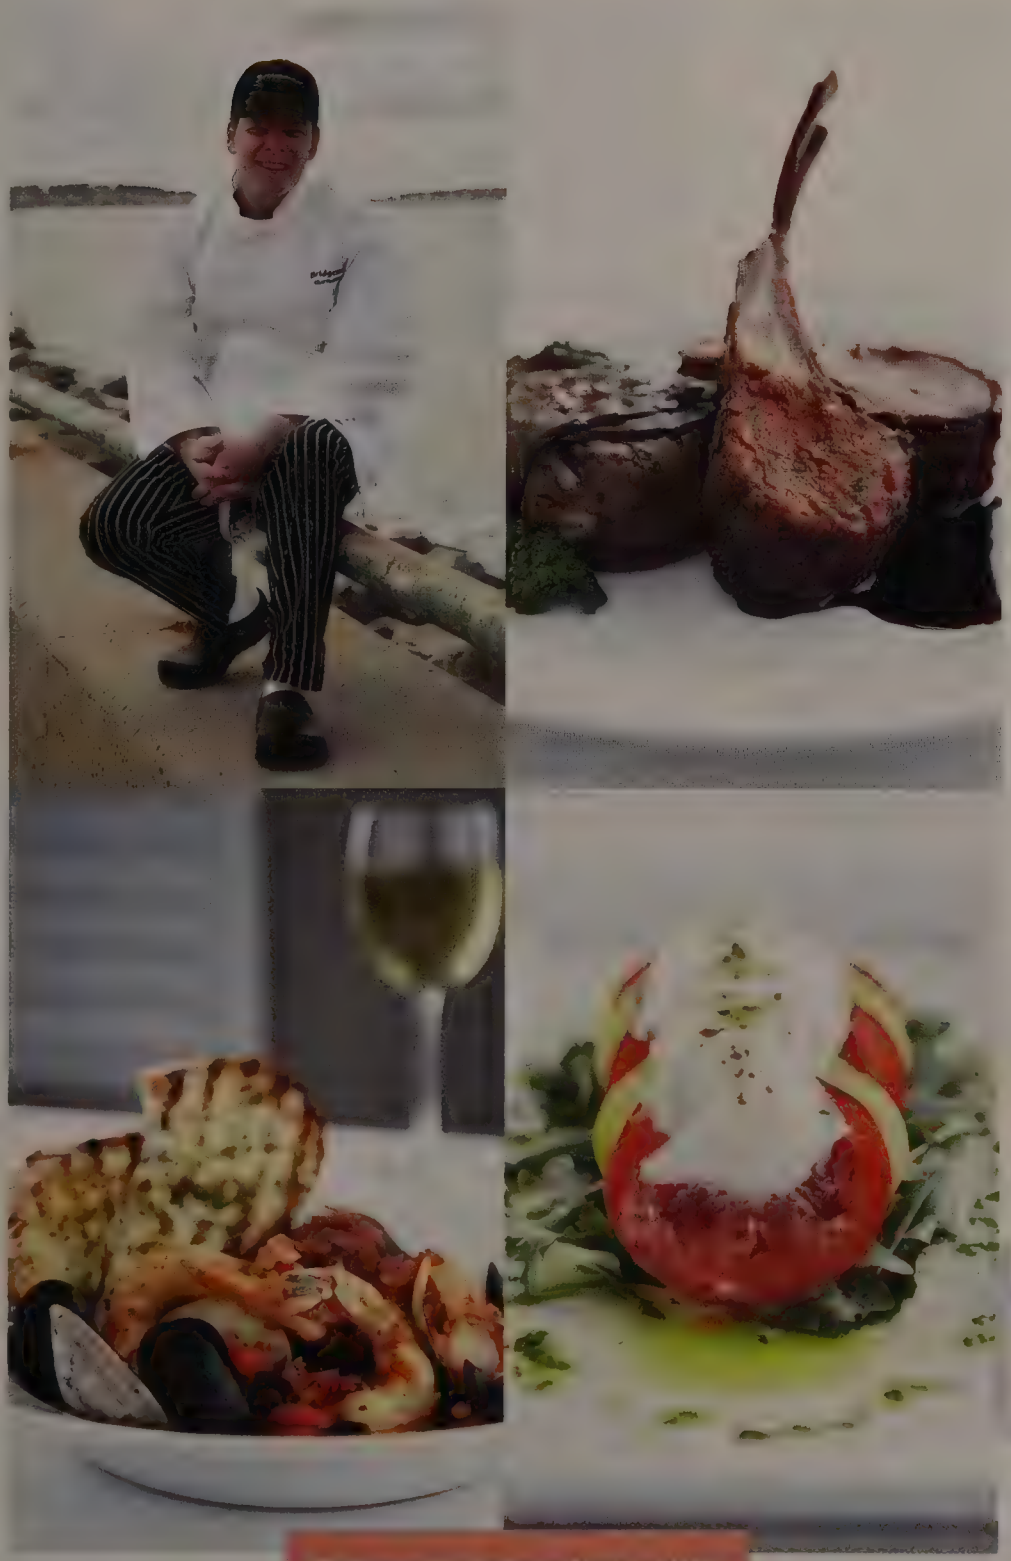
ner just isn't summer without a trip to ocean. And dining at one of the ndid restaurants nestled on the beau- coastline along the North and South es, around Cape Cod and through to port, R.I., makes a seaside visit extra ial. Traffic willing, it's all just a short e from Boston, too. We hit the road neck out a few with a view.

mere half-hour journey north puts at the Red Rock Bistro, adjacent to erman's Beach in Swampscott. Before ers Paul and Louise Petersiel took in 1999 and revamped the space, chic restaurant was a popular clam k. The bistro retains some of that fashioned flavor with a walk-up out- window and adjacent patio.

ut perched above the sandy beach, Rock Bistro's split-level interior is el- t and modern, with whimsical, leop- print bar stools and banquettes, and lows and a deck providing panoramic s of the bay. Gaze seaward while sip- a Marlon Brando ($10), a dessert- mix of vanilla and chocolate vodkas, ey's, Kahlua and espresso; the less t tooth–inclined might prefer the ch Pear Affair ($11), which mixes a with pear liqueurs. A small but t beer list includes the light and re- ing Belgian weiss ale, Hoegaarden 75), a perfect summer brew.

he bistro's menu includes the wn bag of fried sweet-and-tender s" ($11.50)—and rest assured, e's no hyperbole in that title. ed in a brown paper bag and coated special crispy batter, these clams are ly among the best around. Other -tries are the thin-crust pizzas with od toppings: the lobster ($17.50) ts Great Hill blue cheese and fig while the shrimp ($14.50) is driz- with pesto. Seafood and meat en- ($19.50 to $32) include the 16- e steak-frites smothered with a rnet-and-mushroom sauce.

nd what seaside trip would be com- e without ice cream? Large enough 0 people to share, Red Rock's "kit-chen sink" sundae ($32) is 12 flavors of ice cream served with 12 toppings, including Gummi Bears and whipped cream, in a giant martini glass. Red Rock uses North Shore creamery Richardson's superb ice cream, made from hormone-free milk. They also have freshly squeezed raspberry-lime Rickeys ($3).



Chef Paul Wahlberg's specialties include wood-grilled lamb; a Caprese salad; and the seafood-intensive brodetto di pesce.

A little farther up the coast on Cape Ann, Rockport's My Place by the Sea overlooks the rocks at the end of Bearskin Neck, with the waters of Pigeon Cove lapping several feet below. Outside the restaurant on weekend afternoons, musicians gather to jam, and Boston's skyline floats in the distance like a faint grey cloud. The airy, pale-sage interior opens out onto a deck. At lunchtime, a lighter menu includes salads and delicious sandwiches (around $10) like a lobster-packed roll served on a crusty baguette, or a portobello mushroom and artichoke sandwich laced with olive pesto. At night the kitchen turns out more elaborate appetizers (from $6 to around $17 for a seafood platter big enough to share), seafood and meat entrées ($20–$34), and wonderful homemade desserts ($8–$11).

Parking can be difficult to come by in the summer months. There are meters near the restaurant, but if you don't fancy crawling down the narrow, pedestrian-lined streets in search of an empty space, it's easier (and less stressful) to find a spot outside the harbor and enjoy a leisurely 15-minute stroll.

he South Shore has its culinary gems too. Case in point is Bridgeman's in Hull. Overlooking Nantasket Beach, it offers an elegant dining experience in a classic seaside setting. Decorated in demure beige and brown, the restaurant fills two floors—with picture windows on both framing the ocean view—before spilling out onto a large patio. While the downstairs is bustling and bears an open kitchen, upstairs is more romantic, especially at night when the moon rises over the rocks and shimmers across the water. The menu is Italian, but far from the ...al South Shore red sauce experience; at Bridgeman's, the quality of the ingredients is high and the preparations thoughtful. Many of the greens and vegetables are delivered from Cohasset's organic Holly Hill Farm, while the meats and fish are wood-grilled over oak, bringing out the true flavor rather than coating it with the standard charcoal-barbecue smoke.

Chef Paul Wahlberg—brother to actors Donnie and Mark—presides over the kitchen, and his menu includes pastas and risottos as well as a free-range veal parmigiana ($18) topped with fresh mozzarella that comes bathed in a smoked tomato sauce. The signature porcini-crusted, day-boat haddock ($22) sits atop lobster mashed potatoes in a bright green pool of sweet pea emulsion. And Bridgeman's is another place for ...notch, super crispy fried clams ($11).

The Italian "nachos" ($9.50), large enough for two to share as an appetizer, are made from the same durum wheat (semolina flour) as pasta, but the dough is deep-fried. The result is a flaky pastry chip that comes loaded with roasted red peppers and fresh tomatoes, and topped by a delicious roasted-eggplant purée. Instead of the usual greasy melted cheese, these nachos have a pungent asiago fondue.

Farther south along the coast, Plymouth welcomed a new restaurant last summer: 14 Union Dockside Bar & Grill, which is tucked off Union Street in the Brewer marina, right on the picturesque harbor filled with bobbing yachts. The spot was formerly known as the Mayflower restaurant, named no doubt for its view overlooking the replica of the Pilgrims' ship and that famous rock. Last winter the restaurant's new owners, including Christopher Tocchio (formerly with Todd English and Rustic Kitchen), finished renovations that completely overhauled both the wraparound deck and the upper floor to create a modern, smart bar and restaurant with a lively, casual atmosphere.

On weekends, 14 Union turns it up a notch or two with bands playing on the deck, as regulars and visitors alike enjoy the various margaritas (around $8). The extensive menu has a large selection of seafood, including both New England classics, such as steamers ($13) served with broth and drawn butter, and less-regional concoctions, like the creamy baked oysters Rockefeller ($12) and the sole stuffed with lobster and draped in a creamy béchamel ($23). The restaurant also has a dark secret: the utterly wicked espresso chocolate flourless torte ($6), served with a raspberry sorbet.

hances are your summer will include at least one trip to Newport, R.I., or Cape Cod, so why not make having a meal with a breathtaking view part of the experience? Take a drive down to Newport, R.I., and follow the picturesque Ocean Drive away from the mansions until you reach Castle Hill Inn. Then pull up a chair at one of the tables on the lawn dining area and draw in the breathtaking view. It's like a scene from the Great Gatsby, a world of refinement and ease: Sweeping green lawns lead down from the former mansion to the blue wash of Narragansett Bay, with Newport Bridge in the distance.

Built in 1874, Castle Hill was originally the summer retreat of Cambridge-based scientist and explorer Alexander Agassiz. It was converted into an upscale hotel in the mid-20th century. Both the Ocean Room and the formal Sunset Room afford fabulous views over the bay, but when the really hot weather arrives, you can enjoy cocktails sitting in an Adirondack chair right on the lawn and dine en plein air under the canopy of the Cabana Grille. As in the main dining room, the Cabana's more casual menu of salads, steaks, raw bar and small plates favors local and organic produce. One specialty is the baked Narragansett Bay quahog ($11), which is stuffed with smoky Andouille sausage and sweet corn. The golden-grilled Georges Bank scallops ($22) are served with a hash made of potatoes delivered from nearby Middleton Bally MaChree farm and a relish made from basil-laced local Tiverton tomatoes.

Finally, if you're in the mood for a classic seaside fine-dining experience, head to Yarmouth and Anthony's Cummaquid Inn, the sister restaurant to Anthony's Pier 4 in Boston Harbor and Anthony's Hawthorne-by-the-Sea in Swampscott. With Sinatra and Bennett crooning in the background, and an old New England seaside charm to its dark wooded interior, Anthony's Cummaquid Inn has the same retro feeling as its sibling restaurants.

Situated just off Route 6A in Yarmouth, the restaurant has picture windows all along one wall, looking out over a tree- and shrub-lined estuary onto Cape Cod Bay. There's nothing besides a few shingled houses in the distance to distract from the natural beauty: no roads, no bustle, not even foot traffic. Red-tailed hawks and gulls glide by outside, while you nibble on baked-batter popovers and wait for your meal. The classic menu and raw bar selection includes such old-school preparations as lobster Newburg (around $30), or halibut ($26) in a delicious, zesty and creamy lime-and-chive beurre blanc. Start with the succulent crab cakes ($13) matched with a generous helping of fresh, mixed bitter leaves. And end with the rich, creamy chocolate and raspberry tartufo ($6).

Perhaps best of all is a visit during daylight hours, when you can sit back, sip a mimosa ($9) and take in Anthony's Cummaquid's unique views. There's no sign of the city—just the beauty of the sea. iB

Two Of The World's Most Demanding Chefs Agree On One Rare Ingredient.

Any recipe is only as good as its components. Trouble is, whether it's black truffles from the Perigord region of France, pure saffron from Spain, or Black Seal Rum from Bermuda, the special ingredients aren't often easily found. But are always easily worth the effort.

Tom Colicchio

Tom Colicchio, Chef/Owner Gramercy Tavern & Craft Restaurants, cookbook author and winner James Beard's Best Chef New York Award. "My first introduction to Gosling's Black Seal was on vacation in Bermuda. It was love at first sip. It brings an earthy, smooth flavor to my Bermuda Onion Soup that is missing with many rums."

Ming Tsai

Ming Tsai, Chef/Owner Blue Ginger Restaurant, cookbook author, and Emmy-winning TV host, currently of "Simply Ming" and "Ming's Quest". "We must use the best there is, no matter how hard to find. Like rich, intricate Black Seal Rum. It makes any dish really sing, including our Blue Ginger Shrimp Tempura with Gosling's Black Seal Aioli."

Black Seal Rum is made slowly, deliberately, according to family methods that are wonderfully out of date with today's mass produced brands. Perhaps this is why it won the coveted Platinum award at the World Spirits Championships. And why you'll find it the most delicious rum you've ever sipped, mixed or cooked with.

Assuming, of course, that you can find it.

In an increasingly hectic, time-crunched world, it's nice to know that the tradition of sleeping in on weekends and greeting the day with a lazy meal is thriving. A slew of Boston brunches have debuted since last summer, at both new and established restaurants; we've highlighted five must-try spots. Bear in mind, however, that while late-rising trends come and go, blue laws never sleep; don't bother ordering cocktails before noon on Sunday. But do forget about caloric concerns. After all, you're eating for two. (Meals, that is.)

THE METROPOLITAN CLUB

The gem of Route 9

Be sure to bring your appetite because the Met, marking its first brunchiversary this summer, d mess around when it comes to portions. For example, a giant bowl of old-fashioned oatmeal co in brown sugar and butter is listed as an appetizer. And it just gets bigger from there, with bou breakfast plates (like upside-down apple pancakes), or the charred skirt steak sandwich slathere Met steak sauce, and sides like spicy sausages and Idaho fries with parmesan truffle mayo.

Like the portion sizes, the brunch menu itself is expansive—no surprise, since it's owner l Sidell Trustman's favorite meal. Along with lots of standards (your classic griddle cakes and F toast), there's refined fare, like the caviar omelette and the Egg MetMuffin that can come with shaved black truffles or Sevruga caviar. The aroma of the baked goods alone would make the dedicated calorie counters forget their math: homemade doughnuts, scrumptious English muffin a warm pastry basket filled with breads and Danish, fresh from the oven.

Some dinner favorites also appear on the brunch menu, including skirt steak, chef salad a course, the Met's specialty: tomato soup with dunkable (and delectable) grilled cheese miniw Met staffers say patrons are partial to the pancetta eggs Benedict, often washing it down with Mimosa: a mixture of freshly squeezed blood-orange juice, orange bitters, 10-year-old orange li and champagne.

ASHMONT GRILL

on old favorites are well and good, but sometimes all you want on y morning is a Bloody Mary and some down-home comfort food. ly, the Ashmont Grill expanded its no-frills menu in November to le a brunch that fills the bill. The Dot hot spot serves up a mean h French toast (soaked in Grand Marnier batter and served with berries), a wealth of egg dishes and other breakfast staples. The also includes hearty options, like a pulled pork sandwich, linguini, earl hot dogs, and that deliciously simple (and simply delicious) ern standard: cheese grits. Owner Chris Douglass says it's the Ash- s wood-burning grill that makes the neighborhood nook a success es of day—adding that his "killer doughnuts" don't hurt either.

u could consider some of the Grill's lighter options, like salads. 's hard to resist the super-popular huevos rancheros, eggs Bene- eggs Nova Scotia (with smoked salmon in place of Canadian), and smoked salmon and cream cheese bagel. Desserts are ooey- good, too: The brownie sundae comes with caramel and choco- auce, whipped cream, pralines and vanilla bean ice cream—a treat for two.

mmer's prime time for dining al fresco here: The enclosed dining n is steps from heaven on a sunny morning (even those morn- fter when you feel like hell). And on Saturdays, when blue laws as harsh, you can try the ol' hair of the dog trick with a Dot- after the respectable hour of 10 am.

and Sun., 10 am–2 pm. $7–$13. 555 Talbot Ave., Dorchester (617- 300). www.ashmontgrill.com.

STELLA

A taste of the South End

Stella's bright, white and glass décor seems made for the morning sunshine; chef/owner Evan Deluty wisely decided to take advantage of this asset (and cede to mounting pressure from the neighborhood regulars) by opening his doors for brunch. With an upbeat but still leisurely vibe, Stella offers a great excuse to imbibe giant cocktails while the sun's still a long way from the yard arm. We recommend the Red Sunrise (a Bloody Mary made with tequila instead of vodka).

Dishes like the prettily plated frittata demonstrate Stella's approach to a traditional but gussied-up Italian brunch. The menu isn't huge, but the essentials are all there: French toast with orange brioche, berries and warm Vermont maple syrup is a stack of pure tastiness. The "rising star" breakfast comes with three eggs any style, applewood-smoked bacon and the cutest roman potatoes you've ever seen: Squashed into semiflatness, they're star-shaped, soft in the middle and deliciously crisp on the outside.

Dinnertime desserts make appearances, too: tiramisu, lemon ricotta cheesecake, chocolate mousse, chocolate or vanilla gelato, and lemon and mixed berry sorbet. Summertime is the perfect time to check it out, as Stella has a big outdoor patio—just be sure to get there on the early side. Dogs are welcome at brunch too, and they get their own special doggie treats and water bowls. How very South End.

Sun., 10 am–3 pm. $8–$15. 1525 Washington St., Boston (617-247-7747).

TORO

Talk-of-the-town tapas

At Toro, Ken Oringer has expanded his reign as the king of tapas with a new tapas-style brunch, which launched the week before Mother's Day. Toro's right next door to ultra-popular Mike's City Diner (in the South End at the tail end of what's becoming known as Restaurant Row), but worlds away in its cuisine. As with Toro's dinner menu, the plates are small, but the flavor is gigantic.

The restaurant's rustic interior has the relaxed feel of a Spanish café. Eye-opening Catalonian flavors abound in dishes like the breakfast tartine with brioche, fresh goat cheese, preserved apricots and acacia honey; or the pressed sourdough bread with marcona almond butter, membrillo (a quince paste) and banana. Dishes like the patatas bravas (fried potatoes with aioli and spicy tomato sauce) will snap you out of your snoozy state. The most popular items, though, are the huevos revueltos with chorizo and potatoes, and the sugar-dusted crêpes with caramelized Valencia orange. And for the kids (or for the kid inside), there's a bowl of Cocoa Puffs.

Toro's brunch cocktails include a Bloody Mary with pickled green beans; the Del Sol (Seville orange juice, Ketel One Citron and Cuarenta Y Tres—que bueno); and the summery White Sangria in Suspension. Meanwhile, teetotalers and teenagers can sip blended drinks like banana milk and a mango-strawberry smoothie. And no one should miss the belt-busting churros con chocolate (sweet, fried-dough pastries that you dunk in thick melted chocolate). You don't even need to feel guilty about it, since it's a traditional Spanish breakfast item.

Cherry Coke French toast and a Bloody Mary

Familiar forms, fresh flavors

Cherry Coke French toast? Certainly an unlikely dish to appe this Asian-inspired eatery's menu. But Om chef Rachel Klein to flout convention, giving international dishes uniquely Am accents (and vice versa). Her French toast, like the restau other brunch offerings, puts a spin on an old standard: The slices of challah bread are beautifully served with a Coca-Col Southern Comfort reduction, and topped with cherries flamb candied bacon.

Brunch isn't about self-restraint, and Om regulars will notic Klein goes heavier on portions than she does with dinner, st with a complimentary basket of scones. She's also let loose with brunch puns: The brunch's theme is "Om Sweet Om," and her includes a chef's Om'lette—a three-egg omelette filled with wh treat strikes the chef's fancy that week. Indeed, eggs are where Om's most popular brunch dishes are egg scrambles that boldly hearty flavors—the French Avignon scramble, for example, is a wild mushrooms, boursin cheese, caramelized onion, chicken sausage, herb potatoes, English muffin and fines-herbes hollan Klein recommends pairing it with an amber cappuccino with es liqueur and amber-infused steamed milk.

Diners can enjoy the view from the second floor dining roor looks out on the Square or go more casual and settle in dowr with a paper, sip a raspberry bellini, and catch a breeze by the bi bay windows that look out on Winthrop Park.

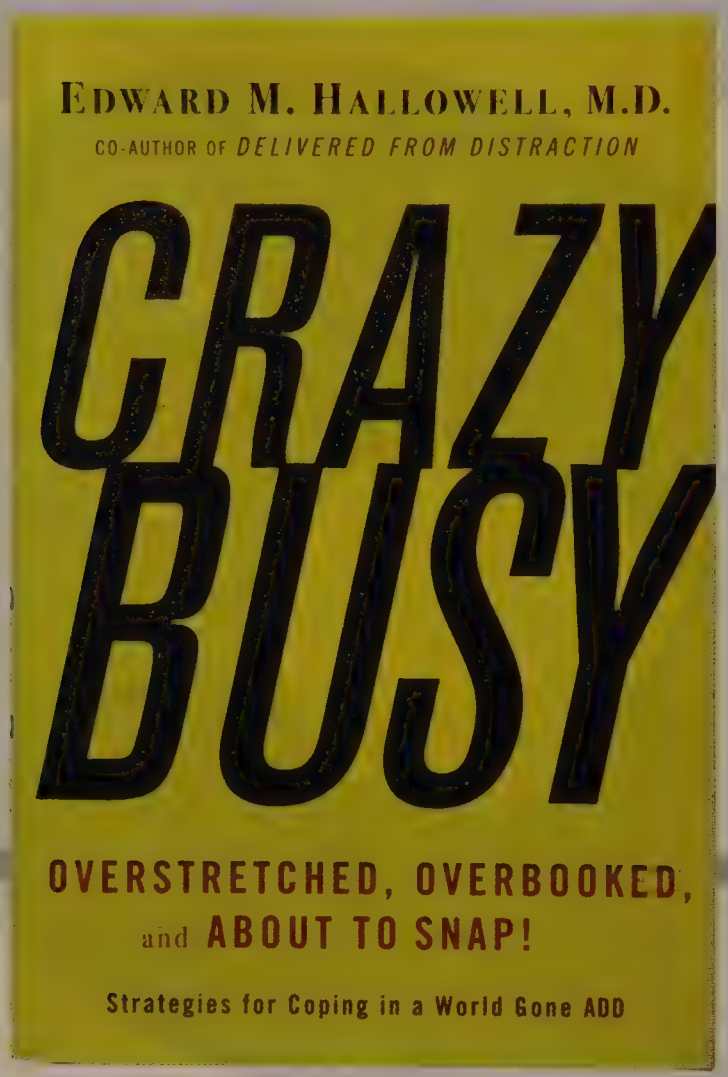
SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



IT'S A MAD, MAD WORLD

Dr. Edward Hallowell's new book, Crazy Busy: Overstretched, Overbooked and About to Snap, presents "strategies for coping in a world gone ADD."

Boston-based psychiatrist Edward Hallowell knows a thing or two about ADD: He has it, treats it, writes about it and even has some fondness for its idiosyncratic virtues. Hallowell also can't help noticing the world speeding by with its "gush and rush," its "screensucking" multitudes awash in "this glittering rhinestone stream of stimulating irrelevance." Maybe ADD should stand for "All Discombobulated Digitally." And while Hallowell appreciates life with InterBlackberryNetCellphone, he insightfully lays out its very real downsides. The spectacle of news and celebrity, from Katie Couric on down, threatens to replace what he calls "the human moment" between the real me and the real you. Hallowell, so chipper, charming and optimistic, admits to indulging in all this electronic gadgetry himself, which makes his critiques—of what he calls "gemmelsmerch" (that "ubiquitous force that distracts us from whatever we're doing") and of the paradoxical mixture of "connected anonymity and social disconnection"—that much more compelling. A return to actually thinking, feeling and knowing each other in person can blossom by noticing, reducing and organizing our relationship to these often hollow distractions, aiming for C-state (calm, collected) rather than F-state (frantic, frenzied.)

LIKE A GROWN-UP IN A CANDY STORE

Party Favors in Coolidge Corner (1356 Beacon St., Brookline; 617-566-3330; www.partyfavorsbrookline.com) outfits many kinds of parties with equipment, decorations and pastries.

Any party-thrower who enters Party Favors seeking fixings is first dazzled by the colorful cakes adorned with frosting flowers—arresting pansies and sunflowers—or with the chaotic crunchiness of the Rocky Road torte. A cake in the shape of chocolate hands proffers edible baseballs. They also custom-make wedding cakes and can concoct individual requests: a princess cake, say, with a huge cascade of sugar flowers. Farther into the store, party décor is both on display and available for purchase. Strafing from the ceiling are piñatas in the form of Batman, Spider Man, a smiley face, a hot air balloon and a dog, to be filled with novelty candies (miniature pianos, film, crayons and baseballs, and Graffiti Zoo's Espresso Geckos), or with any of the myriad madness of tchotchkes the store offers: keychains and felt bookmarks lolling like funny tongues. Favors for showers or other events include droll minibo such miscellany as metrosexual style. And they'll fill a big fat balloon with helium so a purple po butterfly can float happily overhead, chaperoning benignly. Party mode can instantly turn tropi colorful feather boas and a paper palm tree, or made comically staid with a cardboard picture Lincoln. Songs from your birth year are sold on CDs; the 1960 disc features a cover with Jackie K peering out from it.

REVIEW

BLAST FROM THE PAST

Renovated Southie staple Amrheins offers filling food at modest prices.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

For the politically superstitious, Amrheins might have trouble shaking its heritage as an old hangout where South Boston pols dug into huge platters of meat and potatoes or corned beef and cabbage while planning political intrigues. The winds of change have been sweeping through this once-tribal enclave, however, and Amrheins hasn't been immune. The owners have renovated the space and revamped the menu, staffing the kitchen with personnel who turn out first-rate food. What remains intact from yesteryear are the restaurant's patron-friendly prices, its lack of pretension and its warm, informal hospitality.

Just a stone's throw from the Southeast Expressway, Amrheins occupies its original space at the corner of West Broadway and A Street. The enclosed foyer of this sizeable restaurant leads into a large room with one side dominated by an imposing wooden bar, three capacious, crescent-shaped booths and two large-screen televisions; on the other side of a wooden divider is a smaller space furnished with booths of varying sizes and equipped with another large, plasma-screen television. Elaborately framed and individually illuminated paintings decorate exposed brick walls, while cherry booths, flooring and paneled pillars continue the motif established by the ornately hand-carved bar. A smaller room off to the left of the restaurant's entrance contains tables and booths for private parties.

Amrheins' clam chowder ($4) proved a good place to start on its conventional but far-from-pedestrian menu. Served in a small, boat-shaped bowl, the chowder boasted generous hunks of flavorful clams and a buttery, creamy, full-flavored broth, thick but not floury. An order of fried calamari ($6) arrived overflowing a large, square bowl. Seasoned with black sesame seeds, the squid had been flash fried to a light and crisp, nongreasy texture. They were so hot, fresh and delicious that the cup of basil-aioli tartar sauce seemed beside the point. Continuing with seafood, one of our small party tried the lobster-and-crab cake garnished with scallops ($8). This shellfish extravaganza combined naturally sweet crab and lobster, formed with mildly seasoned breadcrumbs into a moist cake with small sea scallops arrayed around the periphery of the plate, all dressed with a pleasant sauce of lemon and thyme. A less-filling appetizer, the Caesar salad consisted of shards of romaine lettuce, fried Par cheese slices, anchovies (sp requested), nuggets of pro cheese and crunchy cr piled high with a heady, m accented house dressing ample size of the "small" p ($3) left me wondering h the large salads must be.

I've been dining in so "small plate" or "grazing" ronments lately that it's a r follow the simpler, almos regime of appetizers follo conventional main course here Amrheins touched bases: steak, chops, fis chicken pot pie. The las ($10, Mon.–Thur.; $12 Sun.), a comfort food sta rived in a white crock ber huge puff pastry canopy. U nately, it turned out to b show than substance, sin pleasantly flavored white beneath the pastry contair little chicken and too tir etables. The drab peas of t pie contrasted as night a with the bright green, al peas in a special casserole "scallop and shrimp Rock ($16), served on the ver evening. Building on the shown to shellfish in its a ers, this casserole cor mildly flavored baby s leaves with a light cream decent-textured scallop shrimp, and the aforemen lively flavored peas.

Even better than the s casserole was the pan-seare haddock ($18), a giant firm, flaky, mildly flavor served with a medley of takably uncanned vegetables under snap peas, string beans, squash, ca carrots and onions. The excellent and fresh flavor of the fish and the r ing range of the vegetable medley this one of my favorite menu offerin house texture and flavor at bistro s. Except for its arrival medium instead edium rare as ordered (I chalked it up ultural differences separating South on from the South End), the steak ed to be a first-rate piece of juicy, ro- beef. Roasted shallots added a note of istication. Finally, but certainly not Amrheins' signature marinated steak $16) brought seven or eight colossal, ulent chunks of rare, tender beef, with r and texture as good as the sirloin, ac- anied by another vegetable medley included green and yellow squash, onions, baby carrots, snap peas and a nd of perfumed, al dente jasmine rice. accompany this credible food, Am- ns' abbreviated but well-chosen wine ncluded a 2001 Morrow Bay cabernet ignon from California's Central Coast), a well-balanced cab with full fruit, ned tannins and good acidity.

mrheins' appetizer and main course ions left little room for dessert, but it would've been a shame to depart without sampling some of the bargain-priced confections, all around $6. Warm chocolate divine cake, a chocoholic's dream with its bittersweet, semi-liquid chocolate interior, came adorned with fresh strawberries, whipped cream and vanilla bean ice cream. Banana bread pudding—a humongous serving rising almost three inches above the plate—combined thick slices of ripe bananas with cinnamon, ice cream, whipped cream and caramel sauce, a carbohydrate conflagration that flouts our national preoccupation with obesity. Finally, another signature offering, Boston cream pie, assembled light cake, heavenly pastry cream and rich chocolate sauce into a Boston classic. Amrheins is not a place to visit on a diet.

Whether you call it retro or reformed, Amrheins deserves its privileged position in the hearts of Southie's old-timers, while offering a bounty to newcomers in search of good eating and good value. IB

And now the path to SDLT is smoother, making for many happy returns in every sense.

BUTCHER IN A BASKET

It's no ordinary take-out: haricots verts with toasted Marcona almonds (not your basic slivered nuts); potato salad made with fingerling potatoes; native truffled asparagus; organic fennel-garlic chicken sausages; crispy duck confit with Bing cherries. The Butcher Shop in the South End is now offering a rotating monthly menu of prepared dishes that are perfect for an urban rooftop picnic. Just take out your credit card and load up on cheeses, antipasti, house-made confitures, artisanal vinegars and the like. It'll probably add up to the price of gas if you were to drive somewhere outside the city.

SWEET CELERY SIGHTING

Celery for dessert? It's not the novelty item you might think (Pompeiians sated their sweet tooth with roasted celery doused with honey and pepper), and at No. 9 Park on Beacon Hill, it's a key element in one of the first desserts prepared by Yvonne Gatt, newly promoted to the position of pastry chef. The complete dessert is described as caramelized pineapple tian with Szechuan pepper Bavarian and… celery. No strings attached. iB

Well, this year's event won't miss a beat, as captain son Varitek steps up to the plate—or, more literally, the age—alongside Wake on June 22 for the third annual itching In for Kids comedy event. The party, which kicks off 7 pm at the Comedy Connection, features performances by dozen local comics, a live and silent auction featuring some eat Red Sox souvenirs, live music and a buffet reception, as well as appearances by CBS sports guy Steve Burton and TV funny man Mike O'Malley. CityScope: Fire 'Em Up

It really does heat up at the annual Chefs in Shorts event at the World Trade Center's Eastport Park, where some of Boston's top chefs don their Bermudas and gather outdoors to show off their barbecue skills. The event, which benefits the Greater Boston Food Bank, includes a long list of prominent chefs (like Tindaro LoSurdo from Smith & Wollensky, John Merrill from Aura and Andy Husbands from Tremont 647, to name a few) creating their favorite dishes for a "summer in the city" feast. The $60 ticket gets you all the carnivorous (and some noncarnivorous) tastings you could want, plus beer and wine for two and a half tasty hours. Eastport Park at the World Trade Center East, 2 Seaport Lane, Boston (617-385-5955). 7-9:30 pm. $60. —LPK

STARTING MON./JUNE 26

Movies and Music: All That Jazz (and Blues)

There's no better time than summer to celebrate the hot and steamy sounds of jazz and the blues—even if you happen to have air conditioning. Every Monday for a month, the Coolidge Corner Theatre teams up with WGBH to present Summertime Blues, an evening of films on blues, jazz, folk and American roots music. But the best part of the event is the live set performed by local musicians before each screening. June 26 kicks off the series with the films The Sound of Jazz and Keeping Time: Milt Hinton, with students from the Brookline Music School playing popular jazz pieces live. Coolidge Corner Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. See the theater's Web site for a schedule and film descriptions. $12. —LPK

Keane perfo Jun

Music: Keane Livin'

They got their start back in 1997, playing U2, Beatles and Oasis covers in and around Sussex, Englan but it wasn't until the release of their 2004 album Hopes and Dreams that Keane really made their presence felt on American soil. This summer, the British trio will be back in the States for a one-wee tour that includes a stop in the Hub for a show at Axis. The group released four singles in their nativ England between 1997 and 2001 and was beginning to build a cult British following, but once a coup big wigs over at Interscope Records got wind of their alt pop musings, Keane jumped on the fast tra musical stardom. Hopes and Fears featured "Somewhere Only We Know," which became an instant with alternative rock fans and teenage girls across the country, propelling the album into a spot on t U.S. charts. Now, after a two-year hiatus, the group is back with their second album, Under the Iron which drops just four days before their Boston show. 13 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-931-2000). www ticketmaster.com. 7 pm. $25. —RL

Heart Attack

High-school hoops documentary is a grabber.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The Heart of the Game follows the girls' basketball teams at Seattle's Roosevelt High over seven seasons, but don't expect it to be a touchy-feely chick flick. The movie drips with emotion, yet, like the athletes of director Ward Serrill's film, it's also tough.

Serrill's movie plays on this toughness midway through in an amusing historical montage about women's basketball, in which—after seeing the aggressive style of play of the Roosevelt teams—Serrill shows early instances of women playing basketball, when the emphasis was on slowing and toning down the game to protect the fairer sex.

On- and off-court drama for Darnellia Russell in Heart of the Game.

In studying the intersection of adolescence and basketball over many years of filming, The Heart of the Game naturally recalls Steve James' landmark 1994 documentary Hoop Dreams, in which the efforts of two Chicago teens to escape the ghetto through basketball produced an enormous amount of on- and off-court drama. The Heart of the Game isn't quite as striking as Hoop Dreams, and race and class play less central roles in it. But the movie certainly deserves to be considered in a class with its predecessor. And as anyone who's seen Hoop Dreams knows, that's quite a compliment.

One big difference in The Heart of the Game is that its main focus—indeed, the reason for its existence—is a coach, not a player. The movie's initial hook is a peek at Bill Resler. A college tax professor, Resler begins moonlighting as Roosevelt's girls' varsity basketball coach, immediately turning his players into overachievers thanks to a playing philosophy that urges them to "run like hell" and "full-court press for 32 minutes," and a coaching philosophy that encourages the girls to keep each other in line.

Branding each season with titles like "Pack of Wolves," "Tropical Storm" and "Pride of Lions," Resler teaches his players to go out and grab what they want, while keeping a sense of friendliness and humor. There's both violence and humor in having his players chant "Draw blood!" before the start of games, as he does during one season.

It's in Resler's second season that talented Darnellia Russell enters Roosevelt and becomes the dominant player on the team. She also comes to dominate the action off the court.

A struggling student, Darnellia misses the start of two seasons because of flagging grades. But Resler gives her his unqualified support, saying that he knows Darnellia's smart because he sees how well she grasps basketball concepts. And he stands behind that assessment, presciently adding, "I'm going to be right once she believes in herself."

Darnellia helps Roosevelt in its battles with crosstown rival Garfield, the other school she could've gone to. Darnellia, who is black, chose to attend Roosevelt rather than closer Garfield, because it's a better school academically. But the racial issue isn't so black-and-white here, as Garfield's team appears to be at least 50 percent white, and if there's any difference in style of play between Roosevelt and Garfield, we're never made to think it reflects the class or racial makeup of the players.

The rivalry with Garfield (coached by one-time Olympian and Harlem Globetrotter Joyce Walker) and the off-court struggles of Darnellia become the movie's one-two punch. The drama really heightens when Roosevelt is upset in the first round of the state tournament because Darnellia feels ill and has an off game. It turns out she's pregnant, and she soon drops out of school.

Although Serrill's storytelling sometimes slacks off—the on-court action is spotty, he never really conveys what kind of player Darnellia is, and her teammates are almost interchangeable—the drama gets meatier here. After giving birth to her child, Darnellia returns to school, but (apparently for academic reasons) the school district won't let her rejoin the team. The next year, as a fifth-year senior, Darnellia attempts to play using her fourth year of eligibility, but this time the Washington Interscholastic Activities Association (WIAA) won't let her, even when she appeals for hardship status. Only when the school takes Darnellia's case to court, arguing that the WIAA unfairly punishes women, does she win back her place on the team. But legal drama aside, what makes Darnellia's plight so memorable is that, throughout her troubles, you never hear a whiff of self-pity from her or her relatives, who help her care for her daughter.

The Heart of the Game climaxes in a showdown with Garfield in the state finals, with Resler sticking to his vow to get every last player into the game because of the team's unflagging support for Darnellia. None of this year's big-budget spectacles will have as suspenseful a climax. IB

French director Jean-Pierre Melville made cool crime thrillers, including 1955's amazing Flambeur. Art School Confidential ★★★

It's not surprising director Terry Zwigoff an Daniel Clowes' latest isn't as vivid as Ghos their previous collaboration. While graphic Clowes had written extensively about th World characters before their story became Art School Confidential was just a little four-j ture without a plot. It was just a very funny of art school types and archetypal situations which were used in the art-class scenes World. That rundown of art school types holy man," "beatnik chick," "angry lesbian," comes a highlight here, though the plot is fa ventional stuff. It's mostly about art sch Jerome (Max Minghella) trying to get laid handle on his artistic aspirations (Does he follow his heart? Does he want to be rich mous?). His pursuit of blonde beauty Audrey Myles) and the impact of a local killing spr plot are not terribly interesting, and th something amiss in any movie that casts Huston and then offers her in only two inco tial scenes. The Break-Up ★★

Despite occasional funny moments and m supporting performances from John Michae and Vincent D'Onofrio, Vince Vaughn an Aniston's Chicago split-up comedy never r in gear. to the movie with no expectations and no lge of Dan Brown's bestseller, beyond its hing premise about the hush-up of Jesus marriage to Mary Magdalene and the lineage g from that union. The tale, about an Amer- orian (Tom Hanks) and a French police offi- drey Tautou) investigating a bizarre murder ouvre and unearthing clues about the possi- such a marriage (some clues involving o Da Vinci paintings), is certainly more so- ted and less silly than National Treasure, as basically a knock-off that attached a simi- of-clues tale to America's founding fathers nan the Catholic Church. (Though Da Vinci n silly whenever Paul Bettany's psycho al- bino henchman turns up.) In movie terms, this is essentially a Hitchcockian wrong-man-wanted thriller, and merely an average one, as the two leads elude authorities who think they're involved in the original murder (and others to follow) and try to uncover the truth. Despite the hefty special effects that often let experts like Hanks share the screen with the historical events they're describing, and despite Hanks himself (who's rather stiff here), Ron Howard's movie can be flat and plodding, and it isn't hard to see its plot twists coming. Anyone looking for more than a decent popcorn movie should look elsewhere. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Hearts and Minds ★★★½

One of the most outspoken movies ever to win an Oscar is Peter Davis' 1974 documentary. This chilling indictment of American involvement in Vietnam is almost forgotten, though, which makes its two revival screenings at the Harvard Film Archive's current At Home and Abroad: The Vietnam War on Film series (with Davis present at the first) all the more remarkable. The movie takes its name from President Johnson's famous statement about the success of our Vietnamese war effort depending on whether we could win over the hearts and minds of the Vietnamese people. But the movie contends Johnson was wrong, and that the important thing was the hearts and minds of the American people. Davis explores the mentality that caused the U.S. to fight the war, examining Cold War propaganda, a dangerous win-at-all-costs attitude and political opportunism. The movie interviews everyone from Gen. William Westmoreland and combat veterans to Vietnamese citizens and Daniel Ellsberg, the man who leaked The Pentagon Papers and who charts our Vietnam troubles all the way back to the Truman administration. Lady Vengeance ★★

After Chan-Wook Park's frenetic, violent, delirious, yet somehow moving Oldboy—which turned out to be a huge DVD hit after its arthouse run—I was really looking forward to his latest. But the last entry in Park's revenge trilogy lost me at about the two-thirds mark. Up until then, Park does a good job building the story of Geum-Ja (Lee Young Ae), a beautiful murderess who, we learn through many flashbacks, didn't commit the kidnapping and murder for which she was incarcerated. In prison she cultivates a reformed, angelic appearance while befriending her cellmates. When she gets out, she drops the angelic airs and focuses on getting her ex-cellmates to help her take revenge on the former accomplice (Oldboy's Choi Min-Sik) who forced her to falsely confess to the crime that put her behind bars. But, astonishingly, the movie squanders all those flashbacks developing the relationship between the heroine and her prison pals by bringing in a whole other set of people (the parents of the accomplice's victims) when it comes time for the bloody revenge. Not only does this negate a lot of the time expended on flashbacks, but since the movie is told in Park's usual over-the-top style, the caricatured tone can't handle these parents' very real grief. Instead the movie just trivializes it. (At Kendall Square.)

A Prairie Home Companion ★★½

Although it's been on the air for decades, it's hard to imagine the movie adaptation of Garrison Keillor's radio show as anything but a Robert Altman (Nashville, Short Cuts) movie. The director's trademark overlapping dialogue and ability to juggle the subplots within an ensemble story are in fine display here. Taking place almost entirely within the Fitzgerald Theater, the auditorium from which the radio show has long broadcast, the loose plot finds Keillor and the rest of the show's cast performing what might be their last program, because their radio station has been bought up by a Texas-based conglomerate poised to end its production. That premise gives the movie a dramatic structure, but it's really just the sort of loose story with which Altman has long been comfortable. It flits between onstage performances and backstage conversations, between such characters as The Johnson Sisters (Meryl Streep, Lily Tomlin) and singing "trail hands" Dusty and Lefty (Woody Harrelson, John C. Reilly) and between comedy and the seemingly more serious concerns of show security chief Guy Noir (Kevin Kline), who becomes infatuated with a mysterious lady in white (Virginia Madsen). I certainly didn't mind an overlay of new characters and faces on the radio show's über-folksiness, which has scared me away for years and still creeps through at times. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Proposition ★★★

The struggle to tame the lawless 19th-century frontier—a staple of American Westerns—is dramatically transplanted to Australia in this Nick Cave–written drama. On the law side are Englishmen such as a hard-nosed military officer (Ray Winstone) trying to "civilize" a remote area and the colonial bureaucrat (David Wenham) who tries to boss him around. On the criminal side are the Burns brothers, who've just brutally murdered an English family. The movie opens on a raid in which Winstone's men capture two of the brothers, and the titular proposition is made: If Charlie (Guy Pearce) will kill Arthur (Danny Huston), the brother who's become a sort of mountain man far from the law's reach, then the police won't hang the youngest, weakest brother (Richard Wilson). Although it'd be nice to learn what motivated the brothers' original attack, class conflict charges the entire story, whether it's between the English and the Irish or the English and the aboriginals. And the well-acted movie sustains its wonderfully grimy intensity all the way to the bloody end. (At Kendall Square.)

The Puffy Chair ★★

For every touted Sundance hit that lives up to its hype, like Hustle & Flow, there are a dozen mild disappointments like The Puffy Chair. This movie about a road trip gone awry has a few laughs along the way, but its purposely flawed characters aren't as likable or amusing as the Duplass brothers (Jay directs, Mark writes and stars) seem to think. Josh (Mark Duplass) is the protagonist, a drifting, 30-ish guy who decides to buy a recliner on eBay like the one his family had, drive from New York to North Carolina to get it, and then go on to Georgia to give it to his father as a birthday gift. But he decides to let his longtime girlfriend (Kathryn Aselton) come along after he pisses her off the night before he's to leave, and he lets his brother (Rhett Wilkins), whom the couple visits along the way, worm his way onto the rental van. Too bad these guys who preface every sentence with "dude," "man" or "bro" are obnoxious and tiresome. I just didn't care what happened to them. (At Kendall Square.)

Sir! No Sir! ★★★

Here's some history they don't teach in school: the story of the antiwar dissent within the military during the Vietnam War. David Zeiger's documentary reminds us that soldiers are not always the ones who want to fight, especially during the Vietnam War, when most of our troops came to the service via the draft. It takes us to many different corners of the antiwar movement within the military: early dissenters like Howard Levy and Susan Schnall, who got court-martialed for their disobedience; the GI coffeehouses that sprung up in base towns; the underground newspapers GIs published, numbering about 300 at their peak; The FTA Show cabaret, starring Jane Fonda and Donald Sutherland, that played to enthusiastic audiences at base towns; the prisoners who rebelled at San Francisco's Presidio stockade; and the Air Force interpreters who withheld information from intercepted transmissions to curtail the bombing of North Vietnamese civilians. The movie doesn't have the urgency of the confrontational Vietnam documentaries that came out when the war was still raging, like In the Year of the Pig, Winter Soldier or Hearts and Minds (see capsule review), but it's a chapter of the war that's been airbrushed from history, well-told here. Open Borders

Calexico takes an artful turn from mariachi vistas to mainstream viability.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Calexico took its name from a highway sign for a Mexican border town, and remains influenced by its environment.

"The Arizona vibe is spaciousness," says drummer John Convertino, who forms the nucleus of that Tucson sextet with singer-guitarist Joey Burns. "Especially now, in the summer, when all the students and people who can't take the heat leave, the town becomes very ghostly and slow-moving."

Calexico takes a new turn with its latest CD, Garden Ruin.

"You can go to the Hotel Congress, which was built in the '20s, and there's a little bar that still has a vinyl jukebox," he says. "You can have a few shots of tequila and listen to your favorite Hank Williams, then hop in the car and go out to the desert in the middle of the day, and the heat goes right into your bone marrow. You know how people say bone cold? Out here, you get bone heat. Personally, I really like it."

While Calexico, which blows into the Roxy June 28, embodies the wide open spaces and mood of its physical environs, the decade-old group echoes its musical surroundings as well. "We were exploring jazz and Latin rhythms and mariachi-flavored stuff, and it was a real break for me," Convertino says of Calexico's evolution from sparse indie-rock duo to spaghetti-Western impressionists influenced by gypsy swing, Portuguese fado and Link Wray as well as Ennio Morricone.

Mariachi-styled horns might not have become a trademark of the Calexico sound, however, had it not been for a chance encounter in the band's early days. "We walked into the studio and there was a mariachi band just finishing their session, and the engineer was listening to the playbacks and Joey and I looked at each other," Convertino says. "We were like, 'Man, we got to get some of that happening in our music.' We thought it worked really well, because we were keeping the instruments very natural-sounding, with the drums and acoustic guitar and vibes and accordion. We were kind of being purists about recording all that stuff."

Convertino and Burns have made the break from purity—but not authenticity—with a more pop-friendly new CD, Garden Ruin. It sharpens the focus on Burns' more confident vocals and writing, nestling the songs within the lush textures produced by Volker Zander (upright bass), Jacob Valenzuela and Martin Wenk (trumpets, vibes) and Paul Niehaus (pedal steel). Wenk and Niehaus also occasionally kick in on electric guitars.

"All of those guys are still growing and improving and enjoying the music, so we've wanted to incorporate that more into the recording process," Convertino says of the lineup, intact since touring behind 2000's Hot Rail. "It's a weird dichotomy because, on this record, Joey has really stepped up to the plate with his songwriting and singing."

Country-tinged openers "Cruel" and the cello-etched "Yours and Mine" set the CD's largely hushed, folky tone, though "Letter to Bowie Knife" more closely evokes R.E.M. or Live with its rocking beat. And "All Systems Red" closes the album with a building maelstrom of distorted guitars.

"When we did a tour with Wilco and saw those guys rocking out, it inspired us," says Convertino, though the band has changed its approach to "All Systems Red" live. "You can't build it up the same way every night or it gets boring."

There are songs sung in Spanish and French on the disc, but the mariachi style is more muted. "We didn't want to get burned out on that," he says. The lyrics, however, still drop metaphorical references to socio-political dynamics.

"You couldn't be honest with yourself and not allow that to affect what you're doing," says Convertino, whose band has played benefits for the Border Angels, who provide water to immigrants crossing the desert. "You can't last long, and then you have the Minutemen out there who are doing just the opposite. They're armed and ready to shoot people."

Convertino, 43, hails from Tulsa, Okla., and like L.A. native Burns, he comes from a big family. And at age nine, he joined his family's gospel band. "We ended up touring the South and Midwest playing churches, and sometimes the preachers would say, 'You can't bring those drums in here,' and my mom would insist, and they'd end up really liking it," he says. "It was a pretty good education for me."

The same went for his tenure with Arizona rockers Giant Sand, whose leader Howe Gelb also drafted Burns on upright bass. "Joey was perfect for that," Convertino says of his budding partner. "[Gelb] likes to write songs onstage. So you have to really know the basics and beyond."

Now, in addition to providing backup for artists from Neko Case to Iron & Wine, the duo is going "beyond" with their Calexico mates. "I'm hoping we can keep it going," says Convertino. "We still have a lot of ground to explore." IB

A Slice of the Pie

You were having lunch with a friend at the bar at Bertucci's in Fanueil Hall on Tuesday, May 16. You looked so handsome in your blue button-down shirt and asked if it was OK to sit next to me. I left and worked up enough nerve to call and harass the poor bartender into asking you if you had a girlfriend under the guise of "taking a poll." Glad to hear you're single! I am as well. If you're interested in getting together for pizza or a cappuccino, let me know!

Bubble Tea Boo-boo

I just want to apologize once again to the guy I dumped my strawberry bubble tea on outside of the Vietnamese sandwich shop on Washington Street, on Monday, May 22. In retrospect, handing you some napkins to clean yourself off was not enough. I should've at least offered to buy you a sandwich or something. I'm sorry I was such a flake.

Shakespeare Shakedown

You were seated behind me and my wife at the opening night of Love's Labours Lost at the Huntington Theater. You were taking notes and having a conversation with the person seated next to you (who was able to actually keep his voice down; imagine that). We spent $120 for those seats, and we went out to dinner beforehand in order to have a nice romantic evening out together. You were clearly there to drive me insane with your constant talking, even after I asked you to please be quiet. As a result, I could barely hear the play. At a $20 movie that would've been rude. At a $120 play, I wanted to beat you with a blunt instrument.

The Love Bus

It was May 18, 9:30 am. You got on the 66 bus headed south, and when you sat down next to me and smiled, I thought I was a lucky girl, indeed. I certainly felt some sexual energy. Did you? You must be in your early-to-mid 20s, and you were wearing a white shirt with brown vertical stripes. You have spiky brown hair. I was in a short, red skirt, black shirt and heels. I have long hair—I spent the rest of our ride together fiddling with it, trying to think of a way to strike up a conversation. Unfortunately, my stop came up too quickly, and you politely let me by to get off. I'd love to meet up for a drink and start that conversation. E-mail me, and maybe we can connect.

IM Speak Must Die

If oo spek lyk ths 2b kewl thn note 2u ur not. It was bad enough when suddenly IM made everyone's attention spans so low that we collectively decided typing out full words during instant messenger conversations took up two more nano-seconds of our time than we wanted it to. And then this aversion to letters spilled over into e-mail. But now, making up words and purposefully misspelling them, not to shorten them but simply to make them look different (kewl???) is absolutely ridiculous. Oh, and while we're on the subject, who in the world came up with "LOL?" Face it, you've used it; everyone's guilty of it. But think for a minute; what does it stand for? Laugh Out Loud. Would you ever say that in casual conversation? NO! It sounds like you have absolutely no grasp of the English language! Finally, the worst part of this vocabulary depletion craze: It's made its way over to casual speech! The horror! If I hear one more person talking as if they were writing an instant message, "brb," "def," "omg," "ttyl," I swear I'll punch them in the face.

s at time of year again: the weeks before the summer solstice, when the Moon Child feels li l to pay dues to the cosmos (the Gemini sun transiting your 12th house). Because Sol o sed by really slow-moving Pluto in the highly ethical Sagittarius zone of your chart, it a el like this debt will never be settled. One day, before this lifetime is over, it will; trust e, n a Sag. n better watch out, you'd better not cry, you'd better out, I'm telling you why: Santa Claus, in the form of n in your sign, is prepared to discipline whatever sive behavior you exhibit when daredevil Mars, through fiery Leo, crashes into the old man on r's Day. Because Mars tends to jump the gun, your ardy act and its consequences could take place r rather than later. Mars is also itching to expand mmediate surrounding—maybe even add to the er of people in it. Feeling conflicted yet?

rimarily Virgins born in mid-September who'll catch the oming off the conflict between the strong-willed sun in Gemini career zone and persuasive Pluto in your tarius home base. Who's the boss? The esoteric Festival manity, the last of the three spring full moon rations, could also be a factor in pressing for a decision e summer sets in. And while a partner may offer some rative ideas, you're the one destined to mop up the mess when your Mercury ruler turns retrograde on July 4.

guys will protect you. There's a decidedly masculine feel e vibe surrounding you, and it has nothing to do with for Father's Day. No, the meeting of Mars (ruler of tes, soldiers and studs) and Saturn (representing the oy network) in imperial Leo exudes power and tige—the kind that Libras, other than Jimmy Carter, ly experience. And when they do, it's not for long. So e you're protected, why not let your pleasure-loving s ruler run rampant through your house of sex, the lt and other people's money?

TOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

you might have to make a difficult, double-edged sion. But before someone gets hurt, consider the full nt of the benefits you could enjoy after your assertive s coruler joins forces with Saturn, the face of the enched establishment. On the other hand, your secretive o coruler is being challenged by the versatile and very al Gemini sun, and their opposition may involve major ey. However, with protective Jupiter in your sign, albeit ograde until July 6, you'll probably come out OK.

AGITTARIUS

It's probably here near as crucial as you surmise, but because extrem- Pluto is so close to the Sagittarius heart center of the y Way galaxy, anything that happens during Pluto's osition to the sun can seem much more significant than at happens at other times of the year. Well, maybe not the istmas season. P.S.: Seriously think about it before you llenge what an enthusiastic colleague may be overstating.

ECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

s a biannual event, yet it's different every time. No, it's t Father's Day (although that's the day macho Mars njuncts your conscientious Saturn ruler). That this powerful merger takes place in royal Leo suggests you'll be lording it over the rest of us and licking your lips with every bit of tribute you extract. Just remember that Leo energy can be both foolish and extravagant, and that the infusion of Martian recklessness could point you to a path that lacks the safety you usually rely on.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Let your partner call the shots, even shoot the starter gun if necessary. There's no way you can effectively direct the course of events that may occur when militant Mars joins strict Saturn in your Leo marriage house on Father's Day. Just make sure that you're not the target for such determination and/or daring. Also, that you don't do too dramatic an about-face (thereby infuriating the rest of the family) when your rebellious Uranus ruler changes direction the next day. These are tricky times. Play nice.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Fielding contradictory signals during dualistic Gemini is nothing new; however, there's also the confusion generated as unpredictable Uranus turns retrograde in Pisces, another doubled-down mutable sign. Plus you have to cope with the weirdness of dealing, for the first time in almost 30 years, with a potentially dangerous Mars-Saturn conjunction in early Leo, the place where you go to play. So, given these conditions, it makes sense to beat a hasty retreat into your ever-active imagination and follow your artistic impulses, at least until the summer solstice arrives.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Before Sol enters emotionally vulnerable Cancer and summer officially begins—around the time the versatile Gemini sun confronts Pluto, ruler of the dark side and rehab—the fine art of winging it, a specialty of the "live in the moment" Aries temperament, should come into play. While you needn't feel threatened by the opposition of two such creative, regenerative forces, the dichotomy may force you to revise your thinking about a long-range goal. Now would be a good time to check out flights to your favorite destination.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

You may well be in one of those "glamorize everything and everyone around you" or, at the very least, "make it look prettier than it is" moods, a semiannual cosmic shift that occurs whenever your Venus ruler rubs up against idealistic, illusionary Neptune. For artists and designers, this provocative square aspect can be a blessing since your imagination and aesthetic sensibilities are being tested. But for Bulls stuck in a frustrating domestic situation, the tension could be palpable; every move is under scrutiny.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

As spring segues into summer, all Twins are due to get a contact high from spiritual, musical Neptune just days before those of you celebrating birthdays come face to face with Pluto, planet of recriminations and regrets. Who did what to whom this time? And why should it be costing so much? Not to worry. There's enough going on to keep even a jaded Gemini interested, so please don't stop what you're doing to mull over your options. Simply go with the flow and see where your stream of consciousness (or, in some cases, your guilty conscience) takes you.

REALITY DINING

Table for Eight (866-822-5348 or www.tableforeight.com) is a social introduction service. Five parties cost $225.

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless. The actual table—located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral—must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences. Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

"Hey Regina, I just went to my first Table for Eight dinner and it was a blast! The women I met were great...attractive, fun and intelligent and the guys were actually pretty cool too. After trying the online thing and being completely "over" the bar scene I was a little apprehensive, but the whole experience was more than I expected. I'm looking forward to attending another dinner party soon!"

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

WHERE'S ALEX TREBEK WHEN YOU NEED HIM?

Taking a page from Truman Capote's playbook, the Boston Lyric Opera hosted a Black and White Ball for its annual gala, and the merits were obvious: The men only had to slip into a tuxedo, all the women looked like dewy young debutantes or femme fatales, and the ballroom of the Four Seasons never looked better, decked out in dramatic black-and-white with six-foot cala lilies as centerpieces.

Prominent among the throng: gorgeous mother-daughter cochairs Jane and Kyla Akin, the eternally charming Miguel de Braganca with the stunning Suki, the evening's honoree, Linda Cabot Black, Bear Stearns bigwig Michael Winter, Boston and Sun Valley denizen Patricia Darman, stalwart supporter Charles Gottesman and his delightful daughter, Caroline, party pair Sherif and Mary Nada, opera buffs Greg Iavelo and Edgar Bulies, and one woman who said, "I almost brought my dog because he's black and white, but I decided that was a bit much."

The highlight of the evening came after dinner, when singers deployed around the room sang snatches from famous arias and guests were given scorecards and pencils to play "Name that Opera."

"What a great idea," enthused one guest. "It's like a game show and a charity gala rolled into one."

"True," said another, "but on a game show, I know a few of the answers. Here, I just wrote Barber of Seville over and over again, because it was the only opera I could think of."

HOW BLUE WAS MY JEWELRY...

By the end of May, the black-tie season can come to feel like black fly season, with millions of pesky invitations buzzing around the desk, cordially asking you to put on formalwear for the umpteenth time and attend yet another fundraiser for some undoubtedly worthy cause.

Yet there's one big-ticket blowout that everyone actually looks forward to: the Institute of Contemporary Art's Sapphire Necklace Gala (so named because the raffle prize is a dazzling piece of jewelry), held at the Cyclorama.

The evening attracted the likes of supergroovy Back Bay couple Ofer and Shelly Nemirovsky, the exquisite Gretchen Monahan, bright young things Lori and Matthew Sidman, Maggie and Jonathan Seelig, and Josh and Rebecca Gold, tech mogul turned rock 'n' roller Jeet Singh, the very sparkly Sarah and Tim Cabot, Beacon Hillions Jim and Meg Gordon, ubiquitous philanthropists Carol and Bernie Fulp, Mr. and Mrs. Hasbro toys Alan and Vivien Hassenfeld, unfairly gorgeous pair Charlie and Betsey Gifford, the perfectly lovely Andrea Finard, soon-to-be-newlyweds Leigh Weatherly and George Denny, blonde bombshell Kim Kozol and her other half, Matthew, the insanely sexy Glynis Gozigian with the distinguished Dr. Kirk Wood, and pretty much everyone else in Boston with a pretty penny and a heart of gold.

The cocktail hour got everyone well-lubricated for a dinner and live auction that raised huge amounts of money, and then the dancing got underway, at which point all hell broke loose (metaphorically speaking).

As one guest put it, "When you've bid more than your mortgage payment on an auction item you don't really need, you can't remember how many martinis you've had, and the DJ starts playing "Sex Machine," you know it's time to go home."

HERE'S TO THE LADIES WHO LUNCH...

Forget the swallows returning to San Juan Capistrano; the surest sign that spring has arrived is when the women of Boston don elaborate hats and their chicest bouclé suits to attend Party in the Park to benefit the Emerald Necklace Conservancy.

The luncheon, held on the Common under a gigantic tent that was beautifully decorated in blue and white, like a Wedgwood teapot or something from Tiffany's—take your pick—attracted pretty much every woman of consequence in the city, an them: Milton philanthropist Pam Laz the regal Jane Roy, South End do-go Molly Dunne, the babe-a-licious Cour Forrester, PR powerhouses Jan Sara and Lynne Kortenhaus, the viva Lynn Dale, brunette beauty Kim St well, the swanlike Stephanie Warb the ethereal Trevania Dudley Hende Southern magnolia blossom Jane D restaurateur and sportswoman De Lewis, real estate titan Lois Kunian (v ing a killer alligator jacket), glamazo mone Winston, latter-day Grace Kell Rodgers, jewelry designer Maud Ca fashion plate Erin Gilligan, the incom ble Anna Cheshire Levitan, and first Angela Menino, looking pretty in pink

Although most of the guests were vi enchanted by the décor, one said, in r ence to the birdsong piped in over sound system, "I feel like I'm in the Room at Disneyworld."

And while it seems a bit churlish to plain about any get-together where c pagne was served before noon, one who opted for lemonade did observe, " tle bit of tequila would give this some but unfortunately I forgot my flask."

Then again, if the worst you can s that everything was pretty and an who wanted to could tie one on, it clearly a perfectly lovely party and tainly beat the hell out of spending th ternoon at the office. iB

NIGHT LIGHTS

Try new stuff. That's the unofficial message of this issue, which we've stocked with ideas for putting some variety into your nightlife.

Summer's ideal for bar hopping, but why settle for flitting aimlessly from bar to next nearest bar? Staffer Rich Levine put on his thinking, drinking cap to devise some creatively themed crawls that'll add unusual raison d'être to your itinerary. Meanwhile, anonymous correspondents G&R hit the town to report on new spots worthy of your nightlife circuit.

In "Never Have I Ever," Seetha Narayan thinks way outside the box, exploring activities you probably haven't tried, from tribal drumming to riding on a seven-person, circular bicycle.

Finally, Ezra Dyer elevates bar games to legitimate sport, recruiting competitive locals to vie for the gold in our first-ever Barlympics. Hail to the barflies.

SOX FANS, SAY IT AIN'T SO

Like, oh my God—the Sox are so hot! Well, you've done it. You managed to put into print everything that's wrong with the Red Sox and Fenway Park ("A Gal's Guide to Fenway," May 31). It's become a fashion statement now, devoid of any soul—where bucks and bimbos are the norm. As a woman, I found your article trite, vapid and insulting. Believe it or not, there are scads of women and girls out there who know baseball and know the Sox.

DISH IT OUT

With regard to Elinor Actipis' comments about your Dining column (Letters, May 31): I also find the descriptive words used from review to review frustrating. Nowadays, "refrigerator-cold" shows up regularly. For a while, it used to be that one dish would be "redolent" with something-or-other, and there was always a report on how the server honored the request for a dish to be split onto two plates. I found that annoying too, but now I make a game of finding these patterns.

—ELENA O'MALLEY

PRIVATE PARTS

Every month I get a kick out of Ezra's writing. His advice for the groom-to-be was just perfect ("Much 'I Do' About Nothing," May 17), and his suggestions are exactly what each groom-to-be needs to hear. So I was reading along, thinking of how to get my fiancé, who doesn't read a thing unless it's on his computer screen or on a plane, to sit and read Ezra's whole piece. And then see the magic words: "Carmen Electra's boobs!" Thank you! Ezra has a great way of sneaking in humor, while still getting an important message across. Pay him more!

NEW IN TOWN

Newbury Chic

Boston's quickly becoming a bastion of haute couture and luxury goods of every type, so it comes as no surprise that Italian designer Valentino has joined the slew of upscale retailers setting up shop in our city. But that doesn't mean that Bostonians with the means are blasé about the new boutique on Newbury Street. At Valentino's small, tasteful opening bash in June, guests were gushing about the lovely clothes and accessories.

Modeled after the Valentino store in Costa Mesa, Calif., the Boston boutique features a sleek design with dark oak-plank shelving set against pale walls. The 3,000-square-foot space carries the women's ready-to-wear spring/summer 2006 collection (airy and floral) and a brand-new pre-fall line (made up of rich gem tones and lush fabrics). The spring line, which gives a nod to Asian influences, is full of Valentino's signature elegant, romantic and never over-the-top pieces. You'll also find handbags, fragrances, sunglasses, shoes and the like. Evening wear—of the red carpet variety, of course—is here in full force, too, and prices range from $220 for sunglasses to $12,000 for a gown. (The boutique doesn't carry the men's line, so guys still need to head to Barneys if they want a Valentino suit.)

Now that we've checked Valentino off Boston's wish list, we can move on to Prada. That wish will be granted, if the rumors are true, when Prada takes up residence in the Mandarin Oriental Hotel, slated for completion near the Pru next year.... 47 Newbury St., Boston (617-578-0300).

INNER VIEW

Wil Wheaton

You probably remember Wil Wheaton as young Gordi Stand By Me, rebellious Joey in Toy Soldiers or geeky W Crusher on Star Trek: The Next Generation. Lat Wheaton's been making waves on the literary scene w autobiographical works like Just a Geek and Dancing B foot. On July 2, he's at Brookline Booksmith to read fr Just a Geek, an event sponsored by eventful.com.

Improper Bostonian: Which movie was the most fun?
Wil Wheaton: Wow, that's like asking me which sp break I had more fun on: sophomore or senior year. W was really cool on Toy Soldiers was that I was 18 anc my own, working on a movie with great actors and ex riencing being a grownup for the first time. But ther Stand By Me, even though I was so little, we had a g time and Rob Reiner always made us feel like actors.

IB: What was it like working with River Phoenix?

WW: River was such a great actor and was so wise aware of everything. We all knew Hollywood was a bunch of bullshit and there was all this garbage we w supposed to do, but River just hated it so much and h real hard time. Hollywood wasn't for him. He woul been so much happier living as an artist who came ou hiding every year or so to make a movie.

IB: Tell us a little about Just a Geek.

WW: I was always the kid getting made fun of for pla with computers and liking Dungeons and Dragor school, but I never let it get to me. The book is ab challenging your perceptions of yourself, finding the th that really identify you as who you are and having courage to follow your dreams.

IB: For being just a geek, you handled the machine gun pretty well in Toy Soldiers, I thought.

WW: [Laughs.] I remember being really freaked ou that gun at first, but once it was in my hands and the c eras were rolling, something snapped in my brain. I like, "I'm a f---ing action hero!"

IB: What's the weirdest thing a Trekkie has said to you?

WW: One of the most amazing things is the number c tronauts, scientists and PhD candidates I meet who say, "Your character on Next Generation inspired me to do what I'm doing today." I think that's unbelievable.

Sweet Tees... Don't be fooled when walking past the new storefront at 279 Newbury St. Despite the store's name (Johnny Cupcakes), the vintage baking equipment and glass display cases, there isn't a dessert in sight. Instead, the shop's filled with Johnny Earle's T-shirts; having earned himself something of a cult following, the 23-year-old entrepreneur has expanded his Hull-based company to Boston. At the May 27 opening, he says, more than 600 people were waiting in line at 9 am to get first dibs on the one-of-a kind, limited edition T-shirts that feature graphics designed by Earle and a few of his favorite underground artists. With help from his employees, who are all friends and family (his mom occasionally bakes mini cupcakes for customers), Earle plans to expand his line to include sneakers, jackets, hoodies, handbags, ties, toiletry sets, housewares and more. 279 Newbury St., Boston (617-375-0100). www.johnnycupcakes.com.

Hip Home Goods... Those who've drooled over the catalogue of Williams-Sonoma's home goods company, West Elm, or even made the trip to one of West Elm's stores around the country, will be happy to hear the company's coming to Boston. West Elm created its brand with the younger city dweller in mind, featuring wares tailored for small spaces. Opening in the Fenway at the Trilogy Building in late summer, and at Wayside Commons in Burlington in the early fall, the new stores will offer the brand's signature clean, modern pieces with a variety of bright colors. Trilogy Building, 160 Brookline St., Boston; Wayside Commons, Burlington. www.westelm.com.

BEAUTY BUZZ

Luxuriously Clean

When I first descended into Sabon (Israeli for soap), I thought, "Just what Newbury need other place to buy soap." As it turns out, though, the shop is a gem. I was immediately dra the rustic fountain sink, constructed from a 1,500-pound, circular chunk of stone Jerusalem. Gooseneck faucets, controlled by foot-pedals, release a wash of warm wate the worn brass basin. Around this showpiece, which is meant to evoke the meeting-pla mosphere of old-fashioned village wells, are open jars of product. I dipped into a pot of scrub, made of minerals from the Dead Sea. Obviously it exfoliates, but most intoxicatir the scents. I'm addicted to lemon mint, though the store's best-seller is patchouli lav vanilla. The space is lined with dark wood shelves, upon which sit simple glass apothecary lotions and potions, and the occasional sorbet hue. Products include loofah soap by the nourishing carrot creams; butter cream bars; smokeless incense; and a Dead Sea mud They're delectable in every aspect: texture, scent and packaging. No wonder glamou Giselle Bundchen and Jamie King crave the concoctions. 129 Newbury St., Boston (617 1931). www.sabonnyc.com. —Marni Elyse Katz

TASTY TIDBITS

Beacon Hill Chocolates

Chocolate on the Hill... Beacon Hill chocoholics caught a breath of fresh air amid all the humidity this month, thanks to the grand opening of Beacon Hill Chocolates on Pinckney Street, just off Charles Street. Owner Paula Barth's shop delivers chocolates in all shapes and sizes. There are animal chocolates in the shape of cats and dogs, a variety of flavors (including the chili pepper variety) and all sorts of high-end imports, like Mary Chocolates of Belgium. The store's open Mon.–Sat. from 11 am–7 pm and Sun. from 12–5 pm—in other words, at any decent hour you might have a chocolate craving. 92B Pinckney St., Boston (617-725-1900). www.beaconhillchocolates.com.

Green Grub... Diners at the Fireplace in Brookline will be feeling green this summer—and that won't be a bad thing. This month, the Fireplace was the first local restaurant to become officially certified by the Green Restaurant Association, a nonprofit that helps restaurants become environmentally sustainable. Though the menu is the same, the Fireplace now uses a recycling system for all products, is free of all styrofoam and is on its way toward implementing all of the GRA's 12 environmental guidelines, such as using chlorine-free paper products and sustainable foods. Environmentalism's never tasted so good. 1634 Beacon St., Brookline (617-975-1900). www.fireplacerest.com.

Chillin' on Chestnut... Contrary to popular opinion, sometimes one head is better than two. Just ask Thomas A. Kershaw, owner of Beacon Hill's 75 Chestnut. After more than seven years of running his restaurant as a split-personality venture with two menus (one upscale, one less-expensive), Kershaw scrapped the stuffiness and turned the entire space into a casual bar and grill. Fancy tablecloths, drapes and carpet were replaced by tiled floors, comfy booths and a simpler menu featuring dishes that all cost less than $20. Dinner's served nightly from 5–11 pm, and the bar stays open on weekends until 1 am. To complete the casual overhaul, Kershaw's put the kibosh on reservations, so don't bother calling ahead—just show up. 75 Chestnut St., Boston (617-227-2175). www.75chestnut.com.

Al Fresco Additions... After nearly 20 years, Trattoria Il Panino—the first venture from restaurant mogul Frank De Pasquale—is still keeping up with the times. This summer, the eatery has opened up a brand new outdoor "giardino" (little garden) with tables that seat nearly 50 diners. The 1,000-square-foot area features a wrought iron fence, brick floor, potted evergreens and teak patio furniture. Not to be upstaged by the new amenities, chef William Lopez has unveiled a new menu featuring antipasti, veal and seafood dishes, and more than a dozen homemade and imported specialty pastas that all cost about $16.

HOUR OF BAUER

Life is a lot simpler when you hire Jack Bauer, personal assistant.

The following takes place between 1 and 2 pm:

Every day of our lives is filled with drudgery and annoying little tasks that slowly sap our morale and leave us wondering when we'll ever have any time to ourselves. This stuff can drive you nuts if you let it, which is why I'm so glad I've hired Jack Bauer as my personal assistant.

Those of you who watch the Fox hit 24 know that Jack Bauer is a can-do sort of guy. Certainly, he flouts authority. He's a bit of a loose cannon. OK—so my dry-cleaner is laid up with gunshot wounds to the shins. But that's what happens when you won't hand those shirts over to my personal assistant just because I lost the receipt.

On one recent Monday, I had a pretty ambitious list of tasks for Jack, especially considering that he works for only an hour at a time. The first errand was to find me a navy blue blazer with gold buttons. I needed the ol' sea captain number for an upcoming wedding. But Marshall's didn't have it. Brooks Brothers had just the right thing, but it was, like, $600. We decided to try Filene's Basement, but we were barely halfway across the Common when I noticed Jack staring at a guy sitting on a bench, eating lunch. The man was about my size and wearing a blue blazer. With gold buttons. Before I knew what was happening, Jack was in his face.

"Sir, I need you to give me your blazer. Every second you don't give me your blazer is costing American lives!" The guy ignored him and kept eating his burrito. Bad idea, buddy. Jack grimaced and pulled out his gun, leveling it at the man's chest. "You're going to give me that jacket," he snarled. "The only question is how much you want it to hurt." This time the guy got indignant, saying, "You're pulling a gun on me? This is armed robbery! I'll have you locked up until—" His tirade was interrupted as Jack shot him in the left shin, then wrested away the coveted garment. "Jack," I said, "I was worried you were gonna kill that guy." "I was," he replied, "but I didn't want to ruin the blazer. Plus, I hadn't shot anyone in the shins yet today."

Well, that was one thing checked off my list. Next I needed to go to the RMV and renew my driver's license—what a pain. We got to Chinatown and the line was, like, 45 minutes long. Jack was on his cell phone almost before we were through the door. "Chloe, I need a complete profile of every employee at the Chinatown RMV downloaded to my PDA. I also need a schematic of the building ventilation system.... Wh I don't care if Bill is looking over yc shoulder. Just figure it out." Then Jack d appeared into the bathroom. A couple m utes later, my number came up. That v quick! I walked over to teller 13 and v surprised to find Jack standing there, we ing an RMV badge with his photo on it a everything. "The teller at this station is d in his right ear," he explained. "I dropp out of the air conditioning vent and proached from that side. After incapacit ing him, Chloe hacked into the RM server and erased all your speeding tick Here's your new license. You're now autl rized to drive trucks carrying hazardous terials." I noticed Jack also made me 6'1" stead of 5'11". Awesome.

Well, all we had to do now was pick a Father's Day present. We were headec CVS for a card when this old guy wear a North Face fleece stopped Jack to ask directions. Jack started to point down street, then abruptly karate-chopped guy in the face and dropped him to ground. Whoa! What was that all ab "This man is part of a Chechnyan se ratist movement," Jack said. "They tr blend in while they plan an attack, every once in a while they trip up. I this guy—I guess nobody told him that men don't wear North Face fleeces." enough, Jack unzipped the jacket to re a bomb belt. He ripped off the deton and growled, "The only way you're g to die is if I kill you. Your bomb's not g off." Then he turned to me and s "Sorry we didn't get your dad a gift Not to mention calling a contractor tc an estimate on that siding. But right I've got to get back to CTU for deb ing." We agreed to tackle that stuff the lowing week, and I cleared my cale between 2 and 3 pm. iB

NULL AND 'ROID?

Baseball fans are crying foul over steroids. Where was the uproar in '98?

I'm amused when people all of a sudden act surprised about steroids and professional sports mixing business. Let's be honest here, folks. The bodies are bigger, stronger and faster than ever. They're doing things, breaking unbreakable records, like in no other era. Do you think it's a cycle we're in? It is—the steroids cycle.

Before you get outraged, allow me to explain. Remember in 1994, when baseball's owners and players did their honest-to-goodness best to ruin the greatest game in the world? Our kids found other options, and baseball, like professional hockey today, went on life support.

But a few things happened. First Cal Ripken brought respect and history back to the game with his successful pursuit of Lou Gehrig's consecutive games record. And then came the homers.

Suddenly there wasn't just one Superman in the game anymore; there were two, Mark McGwire and Sammy Sosa, in 1998. And all of sudden people not only cared about baseball again, they adored it. The home run race brought fans back, and the fans brought baseball back as America's pastime.

Did anybody honestly believe McGwire and Sosa were simply eating their Cheerios and their One-A-Days? More to the point, did anybody care? Apparently not enough to ask questions and push our media brothers to look at the reasons our favorite athletes had transformed into behemoths.

The outrage on display today is ridiculous; McGwire had steroids in plain sight in his locker during the home run race, and everybody shrugged it off. Why? Because more guys were using little helpers than weren't, and those aids were bulking up bank accounts as quickly as they were bulking bodies. We all knew and we all cheered. So let's not be two-faced.

It was that look-the-other-way mentality that opened the door to the massive abuse that's being decried today. I cheered back then, and I refuse to boo now. I love the game itself; heck, I'd probably love it if robots were playing instead of people. So if it's being played by juiced-up guys who create extra excitement because they're driving the ball out of the park—well, I don't feel the need to throw stones at grown men who've made their own decisions.

I don't want to hear about morality, either. This is baseball. I'm not saying that using steroids is right, but I'm not going to compare it to world hunger.

Let me pose a question: If a club offere you $42 million over four years—the sam contract extension Sammy Sosa signe after his home run total went from 36 1997 to 66 in 1998—would you tak steroids? Most honest people would a swer yes.

A guy like Sosa, who grew up in t poverty-stricken Dominican Republi made $123 million over his career. H work on the diamond could probably fe his homeland many times over. He's cr ated wealth for his family and his com munity simply by hitting home runs.

What's still unknown are the long-ter effects these drugs have on one's health. B my guess is that Sosa would say the gamb was worth it, considering his fortune.

I overheard commentators on a ta show recently speculating that Albe Pujols, the fantastic slugger for the S Louis Cardinals, would be scrutinized b cause his trainer was associated with th human growth hormone mess. The ba theme was to convict Pujols and questi his morals.

THE OUTRAGE ON DISPLAY TODAY I RIDICULOUS. WE KNEW AND WE CHEERED. SO LET'S NOT BE TWO-FACED.

I don't see it that way. To me it sour like Pujols, who's world-renowned for work with mentally challenged kids, pr ably has a greater sense of morality th 100 fans put together. And if it comes that he as well as others weren't on the and-up when it came to playing the ga at an incredible level, I'm not prepared call it a moral decision—more like a bu ness decision. It happens in the busin world, and it happens, for better or worse, in the baseball world as well.

The bottom line is, let's not be hyp critical here. If you cheered in 1998 d ing the home run race, you should cheering now. It's the same game, lik or lump it. IB

BRINI MAXWELL

BY JONATHAN SOROFF PHOTOGRAPH BY JOEL BENJAMIN

Cross-dressing cult figure, domestic doyenne, TV personality and cookbook author Brini Maxwell was born and raised in Wellesley moved to Ohio before graduating from high school in Kansas City. After attending the Fashion Institute of Technology and workin the fashion industry in New York, she launched her eponymous program on local access cable and quickly became s a hit that the show was picked up by the Style network. Advocating a unique blend of mid-century aesthetics with a modern flair, she is the author of Brini Maxwell's Guide to Gracious Living: Tips, Tricks, Recipes and Ideas to Make Your Life Bloom, in addition to host of The Brini Maxwell Show. In early June, she rode in the Yale Appliance and Hardware float in Boston's Gay Pride Parade. She lives in New York.

Jonathan Soroff: First of all, are your legs insured by Lloyd's of London?

Brini Maxwell: [Laughs.] Yes, they are. If I lose them, they have to replace them.

JS: How do you keep your girlish figure?

BM: A lot of cinching. I have a wonderful corset-maker.

JS: Ever feel like bitch-slapping Martha Stewart?

BM: Not at all. To each her own, darling. I think Martha has contributed so much. I think she has priority issues. That's her thing that she has to work out, but I have nothing bad to say about her.

JS: You're the perfect lady. Do you ever curse?

BM: No, goddamn it!

JS: I used to tell my mother she was like Donna Reed on Prozac. How would you describe yourself?

BM: There's a quote from Guy Trebay that I've always used, which is that I consider myself "the prototypical prefeminist 1960s homemaker."

JS: One thing all chic gals should have in their closets?

BM: A sachet.

JS: Ten friends suddenly show up on your doorstep. How do you entertain them?

BM: Well, I always have some cheese in the fridge. But if you want them to leave, just break out the smoked oysters.

JS: Celebrity you'd most like to entertain at home?

BM: Good question. Most of them are dead.

JS: Well, we'll dig them up for you.

BM: It would be marvelous to have Bette Davis to tea. Or Audrey Hepburn at dinner. And frankly I'd like to have Joan Crawford, too, but not on the same day as I have Bette. Not a good idea.

JS: Who would you rather serve tuna casserole to: Ozzie Nelson or Dick van Dyke?

BM: Well, I'll tell you: I met Dick van Dyke. It was rather shocking. I had just done a book signing on Sunset Boulevard, and then I met some friends at a café. Who comes ambling up with his wife but Dick van Dyke, and I thought, "This is too surreal." I jumped up from my seat, and I've never been a gusher, but I couldn't help myself. I said, "Mr. Van Dyke, I so enjoy your work," and he said, "Well, thank you." Then he pulled out a card and said, "Can you tell me where this gallery is?" I was shocked at how... not tall he is. So that's my answer. I'd love to break tuna casserole with Dick van Dyke.

JS: Favorite thrift store find of all time?

BM: I'd have to say the one that started my television show: a set of 1950s Pyrex mixing bowls. I got them at the Salvation Army. They're blue and white and they're just darling. I found them for $15, and I was very pleased with myself. But while I was putting them away, I realized they were for food preparation and no one would ever see them. I was despondent for days. I wouldn't talk to anyone and just moped around the house, until I realized that if I did a television show with a cooking segment, everyone could see my mixing bowls. And that's how it started.

JS: I'm not sure if I'm disturbed or charmed by that story. Where do you stand on TV dinners?

BM: They make great doorstops.

JS: Which do you prefer for a casual family meal: meatloaf, macaroni and cheese, or Shake 'n' Bake?

BM: I have a wonderful macaroni and cheese recipe, so I would stand firmly on the macaroni and cheese... but only in theory. Not in high heels.

JS: Are pigs in a blanket an appropriate hors d'ouevre for any occasion?

BM: Well, I don't know that you'd serve them at a coronation, but certainly for most anything else.

JS: Is avocado the best color for kitchen appliances?

BM: There are three colors for kitchen appliances: Avocado, Harvest Gold and Burnt Orange.

JS: Floral prints: Do they hide a multitude of sins?

BM: Floral prints expose a multitude of sins. Floral prints are one of the sins they seek to hide.

JS: So what do you suggest in their stead?

BM: Solids, stripes and subtlety.

JS: Who would you guess was a better cook: Martha Stewart, Julia Child, or you?

BM: I think we'd all have to defer to Julia Child. And although I love to cook, I don't consider myself a great chef. I'm more of a visual person. I know how to create wonderful food for entertaining and for everyday life, but it's not my first skill.

JS: What is?

BM: I'd say design.

JS: OK, what's the best way to brighten up a hospital room?

BM: Leave. I think a hospital room is much happier when it's empty.

JS: Single biggest sign of a gracious homemaker?

BM: Relaxation. This is very important. When you're entertaining, the most important thing is that you be comfortable, because if you are, your guests will be, as well.

JS: Favorite household tip?

BM: Probably using lighter fluid to remove the skidmarks from your wedgies. It just works wonders.

JS: Favorite spice?

BM: Probably Baby Spice. Oh, you mean like for cooking? Let's see. I'm standing in front of my spice rack as we speak, and I'd have to say chives, although they're more of an herb. So if you're going to hold my feet to the fire about requiring an actual spice, I'd have to say cinnamon. But chives have a special place in my heart.

JS: How do you get red wine out of a carpet?

BM: White wine. And a bit of seltzer you have to get it right away, and rer ber to blot. And if that doesn't work, product called Kaboom.

JS: How do you keep lipstick off your tee

BM: Well, there's that rather vulgar of putting your finger in your mouth, ing your lips around it and drawing finger out, but that's something best in private.

JS: So who the hell is Heloise and whe the hell does she get her helpful househ hints?

BM: Heloise is the second generati Heloises and she gets her tips fron mother, the other Heloise.

JS: Is there some secret society of domes divas?

BM: Well, I may have to go into th ness protection program for admittin but yes, there is a secret society, and belong to it. Martha belongs to it, too

JS: What about Nigella Lawson?

BM: Oh, no. She's only a food pers we blackballed her.

JS: Favorite unconventional use of a cucumber?

BM: Garnish, darling! Garnish!

JS: Does mayonnaise belong on everythin

BM: Mayonnaise should be used spar but it's a great binder.

JS: Last question: When will we see th Brini Maxwell line of home furnishings Kmart?

BM: Well, initially you won't see Kmart. You'll see it very soon at your specialty boutiques. In fact, I'm launc new pillow line, but they're going frightfully expensive because I can o ford to produce domestically to begin But perhaps they'll give everyone ideas about what they can do them and hopefully, someday I'll be able t duce off-shore and create a line of budget-priced home accessories.

JS: Brini, you're a goddess.

BM: Well, thank you, dear. IB

Snap out of it! It's not the nightlife; it's you. When was the last time you did something new, ventured out of your territory, added spice to your evening? If you thirst to expand your horizons, take advantage of the warm summer nights to try these unusual, sensational activities.

A seven-person bike will have you spinning in circles, but Mike Lotfy of Pedalparty (right) steers you clear of traffic.

GREEKS FLINGING MONEY AND BELLY-DANCING BEAUTIES

At Dionysus Greek restaurant in Cambridge, patrons dance on a carpet of money so crisp and green that it looks like someone spilled a Monopoly game on the floor, but a closer look before grinding down your heel reveals that it's real. Greek men come prepared with bulging wallets to throw cash at the lead singer of the band whenever they're pleased with him, which is often. If you're on the dance floor at 11:30 pm on a Saturday night, the shower of money falls on you.

Meanwhile, the restaurant atmosphere is straight out of My Big Fat Greek Wedding. Everyone's dressed to the teeth at the long, full, glittering tables. Although about half the women are comfortably big, with big hair to boot, every woman, well-padded or slim, can dance, swaying hips oh-so-sensually, like slow-motion salsa, gabbing the whole time. The men nurse their drinks, watch and cheer, before boisterously joining in.

If dancing isn't your thing, a suitable alternative is to pour yourself another glass of Greek wine, nibble at your kebabs, converse in sign language with your companions and watch more confetti of cash fly into the air. Just don't plan on talking much, unless you get a table far from the music. Anyway, people-watching here is far more interesting.

Those eager to see more hip-shaking skills can head to the Middle East restaurant in Central Square on a Wednesday around 10 pm. A band of fatherly-looking Greeks plays the bouzouki, drum and tambourine, while the lead singer knits his eyebrows at female audience members until they smilingly relent, get up and do an informal belly dance.

It all looks pretty impromptu, until a raven-haired woman in vivid scarlet dress, announced as "Sabrina," makes a dramatic entry. The patrons sit up, the music gets lively and Sabrina moves, shakes, jiggles and snakes her way up and down the aisles, proving again that those underworked muscles in your body can be used to good effect. Everyone claps to the beat, transfixed.

Gregory, the tambourine player sitting close by, muses, "See the faces of the women? That, my friend, is envy." Is it true? Do many women feel stiff as a board compared with this rubber-boned beauty? Maybe not: It's not uncommon for customers to join her on the floor and jiggle their hips just like her. Belly-dance aficionados welcome.

WARM-UP: A CYCLE FOR SEVEN

New adventures can begin small—say, with a warm-up bike ride at sundown before hitting the pub. But don't ride just any old bike: Try the German-made CoBi, built for seven people. Riders sit in a circle, everyone grabs the center ring, and they're off! With your back to the road but pedaling forward, it's startling to twist through downtown Boston. Cyclists are in good hands as Mike Lotfy of Pedalparty navigates at the steering wheel, hydraulic brakes and rack-and-pinion steering at the ready. You just add motor power with your feet and enjoy the experience.

Uphill is slow, downhill has everyone shrieking, turns are a thrill, downtown is a treat, passersby can't resist gawking, and camaraderie is easy—after all, you're facing each other in a circle. Don't sign up unless you like eye contact.

Half an hour later, most riders clamor for more; and Lotfy will obligingly take you on a different route. Once the rides have ended, you can head to the nearby Black Rose pub to re-energize with food and drink, thinking, What a great way to kick off the night!

HAMMING IT UP, BELTING IT OUT

Bollywood movies make people want to sing. But if you don't fancy throwing yourself into the deep end at a karaoke bar, you can build up your courage with food and drink at a nearby pub before hitting Do Re Mi Music Studio in Allston.

The owner, Chang-woo Yoon, is terribly nice, like your best friend's mother. She shows each group not into some big performance hall full of strangers, but into a small, private room—any of 19—with a wraparound couch. It's loungy, it's plush, it's welcoming; the two microphones have so much reverb on them, a singer could bray like a donkey and sound just slightly off-key; and a mirror ball masks your potentially embarrassing facial contortions. This is palatable, relaxing karaoke. (Sure enough, there's hamming unleashed, going on in adjacent rooms when you take a peek.)

As a group settles into the studio, they browse lyrics to songs in 13 languages, including Hindi and Italian, looking for something suitable to kick off the show: Take your pick from Abba to Metallica, as a group or flying solo. Even if everyone laughs, it'll almost certainly be with you, not at you. And at around $6 per hour, per person, it's definitely worth it. But ube up beforehand, since there's no food or alcohol served at Do Re Mi.

Do Re Mi Music Studio, 442 Cambridge St., Allston (617-783-3900). Mon.–Thu., 6 pm–1:30 am; Fri.–Sun. 4 pm–1:30 am. $30–$55 per hour for 5–10 people; $5 per hour for each additional person. Reservations required for the 30-person room. IB n winter, the nightlife routine goes something like this: You toss on a couple layers of your warmest gear and roll out to the closest bar. Once there, you begin drinking—with great fervor—until you've gathered up the liquid courage for the blistering cold walk home.

Bar-going in the summer, however, is a completely different beast. Summer drinking is a celebration of life—an occasion to enjoy all that the city has to offer, taking advantage of the extended daylight and, of course, just getting unnecessarily drunk. Like a pack of ADHD kids in a toy store, we're everywhere at once, traveling easily from bar to bar, and staying only briefly at each spot before the allure of other opportunities draws our attention elsewhere.

This summer, why not put some creativity into your flight plan? Not sure what we mean? Check out our suggested bar-hopping themes. The routes may be different, but all the roads lead to Wastedville.

TASTE THE RAINBOW

For our first suggested bar crawl, you're taking your marching orders from the color wheel. Prepare for the night with a trip to your local White Hen Pantry to grab a Red Bull or two, because you've got some ground to cover. (And if your response to that first sentence was, "But white's a pigment, not a color!" just buy yourself a lethal combination of painkillers. You're uninvited.)

Start things off at Redline in Cambridge and order up the Redline Sampler 2—mini burgers, parmesan chicken strips, cod cakes, beef skewers and mini potato skins—for you and friends. Once you've got some grub in your gut, the beverages go down easy. Redline offers close to 30 different beers on tap and in bottles, and also serves up a mean array of signature cocktails, including (in keeping with our theme) the Red Line, Green Line and Silver Line concoctions.

Next, hop in a cab (or on the #86 bus at JFK and Eliot streets) and head over to the Green Briar on Washington Street in Brighton. The Briar's patio was renovated about a year ago and provides a great spot for al fresco alcoholism. On a chillier night, it can be just as fun inside the Briar, where a live band or DJ performs every Friday and Saturday night.

At your next stop, the White Horse Tavern on Brighton Avenue in Allston, you can kill time with a little interactive fun. The Horse has two pool tables and also features two Golden Tee machines that'll give you a drunken glimpse into what life would be like if you were actually good at golf. Once you get your competitive juices flowing, it's time to try your hand at one of the biggest games in town: Scoring with one of the hundreds of singles roaming around Faneuil Hall.

Once you get yourself in the door at the Purple Shamrock—there might be a wait, but hey, it's warm out—finding an attractive someone of the appropriate sex shouldn't be hard. The Shamrock is always packed to the brim on weekends, which makes socializing even easier than usual—just wait for someone to get shoved into you, and then say hello. They've got live entertainment on the weekends as well, but don't get too comfortable, because we've still got one more stop: the Black Rose.

Its location (just a block from Faneuil Hall) and its 2 am last call make the Black Rose a great final destination on the Rainbow Crawl. The live Irish entertainment and large, floor-to-ceiling windows on two sides create a pleasing atmosphere, but at this point, the atmosphere is the last thing on your mind. You have only an hour or so left to drink, so grab a Guinness and a barstool and make the best of the time you've got.

PICK A NUMBER, ANY NUMBER

If you're in the mood for something a little less intense, try our numbers-themed crawl. At most of these spots, the music's not pumping quite as loud, and the crowd's not quite as thick; but luckily for our purposes, the booze tastes the same, so let's get going.

The trio of the Sevens, 21st Amendment and 6B make Beacon Hill a great place to start. Kick things off at the Sevens with some beer (they have a great selection on tap) and darts—it's one of the few spots in town where you can consistently find an open board. After a couple of games, and preferably a couple of shots, head out the door and take your appetite through the Hill to 21st Amendment.

The space inside 21st might be relatively small, but the menu is a whole lot of big—so much so that the bar even runs its own outside catering service. There are four kinds of grilled thin-crust pizza, a selection of specialty and hot-pressed sandwiches, plus salads, soups, appetizers and food from the grill, including burgers and steak tips. Once the food settles, it's time to head out. Fortunately, you're already at the top of the Hill, which makes the walk over to 6B on Beacon Street a relatively painless one.

The music coming out of the DJ booth at 6B—right near the Statehouse—gives the spot a more energetic feel, putting you in the right mood for the rest of the night. The bar seats just 10, which means there's a good chance you'll be drinking on your feet, but that's better than not drinking at all, so suck it up and suck down a few cocktails. And do it quickly, because it's just about time to move on.

At about 9:15 pm or so, head over to the Fours on Canal Street. You should get there just as the night's Sox game is reaching crunch time, and there aren't many better spots to watch Papelbon make the bodies hit the floor and wrap up another Sox win. If Paps makes an appearance, chug a beer for every strikeout and then celebrate the win with a shot. You're starting to feel a little tipsy, which means you're ready to make yourself look like a dork on the dance floor. It also means that it's time to move on.

33 Restaurant runs the anchor leg of our Numbers crawl. It's far more upscale than the other spots, so plan ahead by leaving the Members Only jacket at home. At 33, there's an assortment of martinis and muddled or infused drinks, a sangria menu and eight decent beers, including Sam Adams, Guinness and Stella, and the downstairs lounge was renovated this spring to provide ample room for chilling on plush couches or rocking out to the DJs. Doors close at 2 am, and chances are at that point all the numbers in your head will have been replaced by stars.

THE NAME GAME

For our Manly Crawl, we're hitting only bars that bear the name of a Y-chromosome carrier. We could've included about 20 different bars in this one, but i name of your liver, we'll just get after it with five.

Johnny D's in Somerville is a great spot for live seven nights a week, but it's also a place for decent Take a chance on one of the unique menu items like catfish and steak tips (or just be a bore and go wit chos and a burger), and pair it with a couple of Stick around Johnny's until about 9:20 pm—so tha can hear a little of the live band's first set—but the time to hop on the Red Line to Kendall.

The outdoor patio at Tommy Doyle's in Ke Square is the perfect spot to commence serious pre- ing. Tommy's has 12 beers on tap and another eight from the bottle, so certainly you won't go thirsty. A few brews you'll be ready to cross the river.

Over on Lansdowne, Bill's Bar will give you wha need to take this night to the next level. Weekend usually accompanied by a DJ or live rock band, but e way the festive atmosphere—along with a couple of Bombs—will give you a second wind, one that need as we proceed. Once the Sox game at nearby way comes to an end, Lansdowne will become a me it'll be time for your next conquest—a little bar lo somewhere between Ireland and Mexico.

Jose McIntyre's on Milk Street is an Irish bar w Mexican twist, which leaves you only one real drin option: tequila shots with Jameson chasers. OK, m ut a 60-ounce margarita will keep you buzzing while ang in one of the bar's five rooms that feature every- from DJs and live bands to big-screen TVs and pool s. But get all your McFun done by midnight, because 's still one bar left.

e of the largest parties in the city can always be at the second-floor airplane hangar in Faneuil Hall n as Ned Devine's. The party goes late, so if you get around midnight, there's still plenty of time to get (Bonus: By then, the crazy line may even have dissi- .) Once upstairs, you'll find four huge bars that make g a drink easier than touching your nose—well, e that's a bad example—and the weekly cover bands Js always have the crowd going strong until 2 am.

IT'S A SMALL WORLD AFTER ALL

rt the night at People's Republik, a Cold -themed watering hole between Harvard and Central squares. Amongst the replica nuclear bomb, Soviet propaganda posters and overall Russki flavor, you'll find a dart board, a nice drink selection and a quality menu. But we're not eating yet, so hose a few drinks, toss some darts and get ready to move on.

It's time to hop on a flight to Hong Kong—specifically, the Hong Kong Restaurant at 1236 Mass. Ave. The Kong serves up top-notch Chinese food, but more importantly, it boasts killer Scorpion Bowls. Order up a few bowls for you and your friends, pick out some appetizers and commence feasting. Afterward, it's only natural to celebrate the completion of your dinner with another Scorpion Bowl, but let's do it under a different roof.

Farther down Mass. Ave., we find the All Asia Café, a house blessed with a laid-back atmosphere, solid live music and super Scorpion Bowls. The house specialty bowl features a blend of tropical rums, fruit juice, peach schnapps and brandy. There's a two-person minimum on each bowl, which is probably a good thing, unless you plan on having your friends carry you to our last two bars.

The next stop is Tibet, brought to you in the form of one of Harvard Square's newest bar/restaurants, Om. Paying homage to the Tibetan heritage of one of the owners, the space is filled with imported Asian sculptures and authentic Buddhist art; more than 50 commissioned artisans in Nepal, Tibet, Indonesia and Thailand contributed to the collection. And the drink selection is just as exotic: We recommend the RoseMaya (a gin martini infused with cucumber, dill and rose essence) or the Lavender Cosmo (a Cosmo balanced with essence of lavender and a champagne float).

Our final stop takes us to the battleground of the Middle East. OK, maybe battleground is a bit of a stretch, but with up to 10 bands performing each night under the same roof, things can get a little crazy. The doors for each show open at 8 pm, but the music rocks until the 2 am closing time, making it the perfect spot to end this whirlwind world tour. But a word to the wise: If a big act is coming to town, call ahead and get tickets first so you're not stuck on stand-by.

he PJ's in the hangar, the yacht ran aground during Figawi, Ibiza—been there, done that—and Cannes is in the can. So what are G&R to do for excitement, now that we're grounded stateside in Beantown?

What else? Go undercover and into the night donning our 4" heels to do what we do best: meet, greet and eat! We've investigated some of the town's newest hot spots where you can wine, dine (at the bar, of course, where you can properly socialize) and perhaps even end up intertwined by night's end.

Sacrificing our summer swimsuit physiques (we write this from the treadmill), we've eaten, drunk and been merry to ensure your peak nighttime experience. Here's a look at six sultry new spots worthy of your attention.

AVILA

For more than two decades, Steve DiFillippo, famed owner of Davio's, has been one of Boston's most successful restaurateurs. With Avila, open since April in the swanky Charles Street South residences, he brings us a new concept—complete with one of the largest restaurant bars around.

"We built a circular bar so that people can talk and see each other," DiFillippo says. But a unique design isn't the only thing going for his new venture. "The bar men fancy, and is priced accordingly. And we have reall bartenders who are well trained," he adds. The co truly works—and trust us, so do those bartenders. ' they're not mixing up lip-smacking libations, the time to dish on this and that; for instance, hotti tender Jeremy Z. informed us that "Avila" is the n name of DiFillippo's mother, a native of the Azores.

DiFillippo's roots are also reflected in the restau menu, music and atmosphere, which are decidedly ern Mediterranean. Both food and drink originat Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece and France. A supe le sound system, warm décor and lighting that ens your complexion will appear flawless all contribute at goal of making a myriad of new friends. And there plenty of friends to be made: Sidle up to the bar and ll meet anyone from a late-20s professional to an adurous 60-something (what some are calling the new mething!).

k highlights: Cocktail maestro Matt S. suggests the antic Peach Martini (to put you in the mood), the granate martini, the Poncha or the delightfully light deceptively powerful) Balalaika. There's also an ex-ve wine list.

highlights: Diners at the bar can choose from either o menus: full dinner or lounge. Try the salt cod fritcalamari, River Rock beef burger (beef from a nearby in Western Massachusetts makes it surprisingly light, and moolicious), Philly cheesesteak spring rolls or beef pizza—very satisfying, as it's like having your eburger and pizza, too. If you're really ravenous, tuck he well-endowed grilled porterhouse veal chop.

act: 1 Charles St. South, Boston (617-267-4810).

ing hours: The lounge menu is available Sun.–
until 11 pm, and Wed.–Sat. until midnight. Cock-re served until 12:30 am.

s: Business casual, but chic.

DANTE

we have ventured across the pond to Cambridge—achusetts, not England!—and after visiting Dante in the Royal Sonesta since April), we recommend you follow suit. Where else will you find fine dining ined with a sleek and chic design (courtesy of the talented Dennis Duffy), including original artwork, and a patio view of the Charles River and Boston skyline? Not to mention the industry expertise of each of the co-owner de Magistris brothers—Dante, Damian and Filippo.

News of Dante's late-night food and drink offerings has been well-received, to say the least. "This is huge for Boston," said patrons at the bar upon hearing about the still-under-development bar menu. Yes, it's a most welcome service for night-owl noshers and those seeking a nightcap or two with a view. With cocktails served every night until 2 am, and a party on Thursdays featuring a DJ, specialty cocktails and bar snacks from 11 pm–1 am, Dante will enhance its reputation as an after-hours hangout.

Drink highlights: Bar manager and bartender Jayson G. suggests the white-grape martini with aloe vera juice, or the champagne mojito. After two of these, you'll be the life of the party. Bartender Jennifer M. makes a mean Passion Cosmo, and pastry chef Daniel M. says the ginger soda makes for a perfect summer dessert. He describes it as "cold, effervescent, sweet and a bit spicy, coming well-frothed with foam." Need G&R say more than "Note to self..."?

Food highlights: Chef Dante's new bar menu is still under construction, but look for items like caramelized onion tarte tatin, handmade spaghetti and a mini lobster "clambake"—all served late, even in the outside space. And for those days when you're feeling stressed out, bartender Jennifer recommends a cure: the hot chocolate cake.

Contact: Royal Sonesta Hotel, 5 Cambridge Pkwy., Cambridge (617-497-4200).

Evening hours: Food service: Mon.–Wed. until 10 pm; Thu.–Sat. until 1 am; Closed Sun. until midsummer, at which time the bar will be open until 10 pm. Cocktails are served every night until 2 am.

Dress: Anything goes.

Best pickup line: "Hello, ladies. Dinner's on me." (Note: In this case, it's not the line; it's the delivery.)

THE DISTRICT

The décor at the District might be inspired by classic literature (Dante's Divine Comedy, we're told), but traditional it's not. This isn't your daddy's Oak Bar—which makes sense, given that it's located in a neighborhood as suggestively named as the Leather District. (It's not what you're thinking, though; leather works were once located here). In lieu of wood paneling and club chairs, the District is lined with white birch trees and appointed throughout with creamy, studded, patent-leather couches and banquettes.

"We wanted to create a trendy, hip alternative that's part New York, part South Beach for the Financial/Leather District neighborhood and Newbury Street crowd," partner Sal Boscarino says. "It's edgy yet inviting." True, but we've got one bit of advice for the ladies: Before perching yourself atop one of the conversation-stimulating, see-through Lucite bar stools or chairs, wear proper La Perla panties, as short summer skirts might reveal more than you expected.

Drink highlights: Signature cocktails, such as the Punica Granatum (Latin for "pomegranate") martini, change by the season.

Food highlights: Although the bar menu had yet to be finalized when G&R caught a sneak peak, we learned that all selections would be both delicious and cost-conscious, with most items meant to be shared. Don't miss the crab cakes, spring rolls, shrimp tempura and crisp calamari (as well an Angus beef burger with truffle frites for all you carnivores).

Contact: 180 Lincoln St., Boston (617-426-0180).

Evening hours: Open Tue.–Sun. until 2 am. Dinner, Tue.–Sun., 5:30–10 pm; bar menu, 10 pm–1 am.

Dress: Clubby. And as the interior is black and white with a touch of red, you might want to coordinate!

Best pickup line: "Meet you under the bar stool." (Runner-up: "I'm sorry that I just slid onto your lap—but that patent leather couch is oh-so-slippery.")

DIVA LOUNGE

One more trip over the river and through the streets, to Diva Lounge G&R go, where Somerville has its own taste of rockin' Bollywood in Davis Square. It's a hip scene with bubbles, bubbles everywhere (in the form of white domed-glass tiles from floor to ceiling)—and many drops to drink.

But underlying the energy of this new hot spot, popular with 20-somethings, is a lot of restaurant experience. In fact, much of the lounge reflects the influence of its mother, Diva—the chic Indian restaurant next door—and its siblings, Mantra, Café India, Kashmir and Bukhara.

Drink highlights: Warning: After several infused cocktails from one of the three tall and mysterious bottles on the bar, you may be tempted to try some moves from the kama sutra under it! According to manager Taylor A., the lounge's most popular and potent drinks are the Shiva, the Karma Sutra (flavored with cardamom and allspice) and, sweetest of all, the Assam. Do you fancy gin? Go for the Ali Baba. The watermelon and blueberry margaritas and flavored mojitos are some of the yummiest around, all made with fresh fruit. As Taylor asks, "What's wrong with getting your vitamins in a martini?" (Taylor is our kind of gal!)

Food highlights: Nibbles are on the exotic side. We suggest the smoky tandoori mushrooms, the dosa of the day, shrimp samosas or minted scallops in saffron sauce. But if you prefer to stay on the mild side, go for the crab cakes, mozzarella and green chili naan, or chicken satay with sweet chili sauce. And for dessert, there's no way to beat the Chandni torte. As Taylor says, "People feel like they're doing something bad when they eat this, it's just so good."

Contact: 248 Elm St., Somerville (617-629-4963).

Evening hours: Mon.–Wed.: Food served until 11 pm, drinks until midnight. Thu.–Sat.: Food served until midnight, drinks until 1 am.

Dress: Casual.

Best pickup line: "Rub my bottle and I'll grant you three wishes!"

DOUZO

New York style meets Dartmouth Street at Douzo, which translates as "please, kindly, by all means" in Japanese. And its fashion-forward and dramatic interior is definitely going places. Twenty-foot-high ceilings, lacquered wood and candle lighting add to the funky but inviting vibe. Douzo boasts a well-laid-out lounge and bar area and an extensive (and reasonably priced) cocktail menu including all your favorites, as well as a wide variety of sakes. For nibbles, the full menu is offered at the bar and in the lounge area.

"The most important thing to us was to offer great food in a fun, upscale and social environment," says owner Jack Huang, former co-owner of Fugakyu in Brookline. But that doesn't mean they've skimped on the service: Members of Huang's staff are well-trained, personable and helpful. And while enjoying your food and drink, you'll be surrounded by an attractive and eclectic mix of Back Bay young urban professionals, South End artsies and European transplants ranging in age from low 20s to 50-something.

Drink highlights: Knowledgeable bartender Liam B. informed us that Sake doesn't result in a hangover. (Did we mention that the servers are helpful?) With that notable tidbit in mind, we felt compelled to sample not only several delicious sake selections, but a few (well-priced at $9.50 each) signature cocktails as well. The Saketini, Tokyo Cosmo, key lime mojito and Green Tea Potion all earn two manicured thumbs up.

Food highlights: The Back Bay roll, torched tuna and cucumber hand roll with spicy salmon were quick to satisfy. Not into seafood? No worries. Try the surprisingly yummy sweet potato tempura. Meat and beef lovers will go for beef negima, teriyaki, and beef or chicken kushiyaki.

Contact: 131 Dartmouth St., Boston (617-859-8886).

Evening hours: Lounge menu until 11:30 pm; bar open until midnight.

Dress: Blend of Back Bay meets South End.

Best pickup line: "Bonjour. I have been all around the world and have never seen sake served in a wine glass. So much will soon have you crying for your Momma. Would you like a glass?"

SORELLINA

Paul Roiff & Jamie Mammano (the duo behind Mistral) named the newest addition to their restaurant family Sorellina, meaning "little sister," and she's quickly become the shining light in Boston's nightlife scene. Sorellina's chic but quite comfortable, with a modern minimalist flair that's softened by a back wall mural, supple leather and quilted drapery fabric. But trust G&R: After hanging out here for a few nights and tasting the wonderful contemporary regional Italian cuisine (full menu served at the bar), you'll feel anything but minimal in size! High, floating paneled ceilings and a long, L-shaped lounge/bar area make for open spaces and easy crowd flow. And while at the bar, you'll meet the full range of Boston's ageless smart set.

"We wanted to offer the best Italian-inspired grill could create, in an elegant and modern setting with any pretension," says general manager Ron Vale. A Sorelina achieves this aim with a warm and friendly s food to crave and cocktails that have already develop large, repeat-clinking clientele. It also provides so thing that none of our other newest night spots d Complimentary car service is available upon request, ally from 6:30–11:30 pm, to points within a two-mile dius of the restaurant.

Drink highlights: The espresso martini packs a tasty potent wallop. Down two of those (and they do go d quickly), and by the end of the night you won't kn what you're doing—or whom.

Food highlights: We suggest the tuna tartare (fast coming a favorite in town for tuna aficionados), K meatballs, succulent grilled-whole shrimp and, dessert, executive chef John Delpha's newest choco concoction: the Oh My…!, a warm chocolate bud with cinnamon ice cream. It left these gals satiate speechless.

Contact: 1 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-412-4600)

Evening hours: Open Mon.–Wed. until 11:30 Thu.–Sat. until midnight; and Sun. until 11 pm.

Dress: Finally, a place where proper dress is requi Dress is upscale: no ripped jeans, sneakers or hats on m

Best pickup line: "I'm going to teach you how to ki (Runner-up: "Would you like a decadent choco dessert?")

Think you've seen it all when it comes to Bos nightlife? Forget that cocktail-glass-half-empty pessimi These six newcomers prove there are still unspoiled vi to discover. We look forward to receiving our invitati to meet, great, eat and hopefully sip—at any of these sultry, six. Our beverage of choice? A martini, natur always well shaken to cause quite a stir. ELEVEN CONTESTANTS VIE FOR THE GOLD IN THE FIRST-EVER y sport has a marquee event: one defining, glorious showdown that can make or ak careers and reputations. Football has the Super Bowl. Baseball has the World ies. The WNBA has... some sort of championship, I imagine. But towering r them all, so staggeringly massive and important that it only comes around e every four years, we have the summer Olympics. The Olympics are important just because they give Bob Costas the chance to broadcast without sleep for two d weeks; no, for many athletes, the Olympics provide the lone opportunity to c in the fleeting glow of publicity that wouldn't ordinarily shine on, say, ham-throwing.
"INTERNATIONAL" BAR-GAME EXTRAVAGANZA.

THE BARLYMPIC GAMES

BY EZRA DYER PHOTOGRAPHS BY JASON WALLENGREN

fact, pundits often mock the Olympics for their all-inclusive nature. Are ch volleyball and table tennis (which are still miles better than the "sports" wcased in those red-headed step-lympics, the winter games) truly worthy of in- ion in such a venerated international athletic forum? Well, we say that, far the Olympics being too inclusive, they're actually not inclusive enough. ry night in Boston, scores of competitors ascend the heights of glory and wal- in the depths of despondence while engaged in sports that as yet go unrecog- d by the International Olympic Committee. It's a travesty, to be sure: If you go eijing in 2008, you'll not find Golden Tee, bowling, darts, pool or the Boxer ching machine on the schedule. That's why we formed our own commission to r nize a competition that celebrates games that can be played—and often are ed—while drunk. Welcome, then, to the 2006 Barlympic Games.

Just like at the Olympics, the sports of the Barlympics are too diverse to fit under a single roof. And so our events are split between three venues: Tom ish's Cottage in South Boston for pool, Golden Tee and darts; Lucky Strike s for bowling; and finally onto the Beacon Hill Pub for the "hitting a punching as hard as you can and seeing what your score is" segment. Transportation for our tes is provided by the Bustonian, which is incidentally stocked with sports bev- es for competitors to consume between events. The International Barlympic mission (IBC) recognizes that dehydration can be fatal, and so the Bustonian's dration station is packed with Coorsade, Keystoneade and Millerade. We must, r all circumstances, keep those electrolytes up.

While the United States is boycotting the Barlympics in protest of the IBC's hip corporate sponsor, Jong-Il Air ("Daily nonstops from Pyongyang to an!"), we still have 11 nations vying for a spot on the podium. Our contes- s, it should be pointed out, are in no way actually endorsed by the countries ve chosen to represent. In fact, many of them would probably be turned away stoms in the country they represent. However, they still feel an affinity for e foreign lands—and in two cases, actually hail from the nation to which they to bring glory. Stephanie, for instance, is a French citizen, with a French ort to prove it. (In the Barlympics' complex, some might say unfathomable, ng system, this counts for an extra point.) Our other real-life foreigner is , who represents her native Canada by wearing an impressive array of maple- logoed hockey gear. Representing another neighbor to the north is Matt, who lay for the nation of Quebec, which is recognized as a sovereign state by the Matt is wearing his homeland's native garb—a mullet, a hockey helmet, s and work boots with the tongues pulled out. Believe us, the IBC caught a f heat from the Canadian government for recognizing Quebec's secession, but ook at Lane and Matt and it's obvious that they're from two profoundly dif- t peoples with fundamentally disparate interests—for instance, one group hockey, and the other really, really loves hockey. It's surprising they even n the same continent, really.

ing the Australian flag is Whits, who also has a mullet, along with rubber , a shark-tooth necklace, a Crocodile Dundee–style hat and a Poison T-shirt. e not sure he really looks Australian, but we've never lived there and he has, guess we can't argue. Rounding out the Anglophones is Kara, representing nd, dressed à la Sporty Spice and wearing a "Mind the Gap" T-shirt. Kara ght along our German competitor, Deb, while neglecting to tell her the point r evening. Thus Deb donned a German beer-girl outfit, complete with a skirt pressive brevity that is definitely increasing the ratings of the Barlympics g the Tom English's Cottage regulars. While Deb gets an A for effort, it re- s to be seen how her devotion to the authentic beer-girl costume will affect erformance once we start bowling.

so hailing from the Continent are Italy (our second Stephanie, wearing a r Mario Bros. T-shirt but not the fake mustache that would garner her duper extra points), Ireland (the very Irish Burke, sporting a Paul Pierce jer- nd a green plastic hat) and Portugal (Ted, whose costume consists of wearing ortuguese ancestry on his sleeve). Rounding out the field are Millman, repre- ng the Bunker—which I understand is a principality something like Monaco, ased in Framingham and looking much like Millman's house—and Scott, playing for Mexico mostly because he happens to own a T-shirt that says ico" on it. Ladies and gentlemen, let the games begin.

1. Italy shows perfecto form on her Golden Tee follow-through. 2. England imagines the bull's-eye is a bloody Yank. 3. Canada and Australia celebrate their dead-eye darts skill. 4. Quebec brings his "eh?" game to the pool table. 5. Mexico does his best Oscar de la Hoya impersonation. 6. Germany is the hands-down winner as Best Dressed.

Our field, 11-strong, splits into three groups and descends on the pool table, dartboard and Golden Tee console. Our first Golden Tee bracket consists of Ireland, France and Australia. France claims she's never played Golden Tee before, and yet she doesn't finish far behind Ireland at the tricky Painted Gorge course in South Africa. Australia finishes first, at one over par for nine holes, but it's soon evident that we won't have time for everyone to play nine holes. So the Commissioner decrees that subsequent groups will play only three holes, which immediately draws protest from Ireland. "I was two under par after three holes!" claims Burke, who finished at +11. This situation is causing the Commish undue stress, so it's time to see how darts are going.

It should be pointed out that the Barlympics darts competition doesn't embrace any traditional format. We play PIG darts, which is modeled after HORSE in basketball: When a player calls a shot and makes it, the next players must duplicate that shot or receive a letter. When you've got three letters, you're out.

This sounds like a simple concept, right? Not so. Perhaps it has something to do with the beer, but the procedure for PIG darts will require explanation many times to each group. Right now Mexico, Canada, England and Germany seem to get the idea. In Mexico, the children grow up playing PIG darts from the age of two, and everyone knows that the best PIG darts players in the world come from the Baja Peninsula. So it's no surprise when England and Germany are quickly P-I-G'ed, leaving Mexico locked in an epic battle with Canada. They trade shots back and forth until, shockingly, Canada stages a huge upset and takes her first win. In Mexico City, rioting begins.

As the Games progress, it becomes clear that the schedule might need to be adjusted. For instance, it appears that nobody is any good at pool, so our three-person games of cutthroat are taking forever. PIG darts has also evolved into a time-consuming proposition, as competitors are forsaking relatively easy shots in favor of hurling darts left-handed from the other side of the room (Australia), going between the legs (Bunker) or attempting the Force shot—eyes closed. Germany, Quebec, Portugal and Italy make it through a round of Golden Tee that's rendered useless because, according to Portugal, "We don't know who won because everyone entered their name as 'AAA.'"

The pitchers of PBR are flowing, and someone suggests adding an event that measures how much ice one can melt in the urinal. Burke, his festive green derby hat developing a crack down the side, returns from the bathroom and says, "The Irish gentleman over there just told me, 'You have a whole country behind you!'" Indeed, Irish Barlympics fans are amongst the most devoted in the world.

At 8:15 pm, the Tom English's Cottage segment ends and the contestants are herded aboard the Bustonian. The time spent at TEC seems to have put everyone in a state of friendly good cheer. Portugal and Italy are establishing diplomatic relations, and England climbs aboard the bus driver's lap and attempts to take the wheel. "Is this a stick shift?" she asks, to which Quebec yells, "It is now!" Everyone is enjoying their sports beverages.

At Lucky Strike Lanes, adjacent bowlers glance warily at our group as if there's something unusual about a refugee from a Southie St. Patty's Day party squaring off against a German beer girl and a guy wearing a hockey helmet. The Commissioner attempts to enforce a rule requiring everyone to make a trick shot every other frame, but that's abandoned when it becomes clear that the competitors, ever-hungry for an edge, will define "trick shot" as "virtually indistinguishable from a normal shot." Germany gets moral points for breaking 100 while managing to avoid bending over the entire time.

When the last balls are rolled, Canadian Lane's lucky strikes give her the victory at Lucky Strike Lanes, with a score of 127. Bunker looks like a solid second place with 123 until Quebec finishes strong and ties him on the final frame, bumping Ireland (112) to fourth. With two first-place finishes, Canada is going strong.

Bowling shoes returned, we're back on the bus and rolling ward our final destination, the Beacon Hill Pub, home of of the premier bar games in the city: the Boxer. The premis the Boxer is that, for $1, you get to hit a punching bag as h as you can and find out if you're the next Mike Tyson or next Alex Rodriguez. The Boxer is an unforgiving advers and many a challenger is sent home with scraped knuckle sore wrist and a bruised ego.

The Boxer, like bowling, is a useful event for the math-challenged IBC scorers bec everyone gets a numerical value assigned to their jab. Anything above 500 is respecta anything above 600 is competitive, and anything above 700 means your fist should registered weapon. You may think that our female competitors were at a disadvan here, but that's not necessarily so—right off the bat, England wallops the bag for a s of 573, putting her permanently ahead of at least two male competitors who shall rem anonymous, lest they be attacked on the street by hard-punching gangs of girls.

Competitors can attempt as many punches as they want, and the multiple-try proach reveals distinctly different styles when it comes to whaling on someone's f Australia, for example, has a Wily Mo Pena-esque punching style—it's either al nothing. On one try, he misses the bag entirely, notching the first goose egg of the ni On his follow-up hit, he bludgeons the Boxer for a 746. It turns out that score will st for first place. Portugal also joins the 700 Club with a 712, and Quebec, no doubt in ining a belligerent Bruins defenseman in his face, comes in third with a 689. It's tim climb back aboard the bus for the awards ceremony.

Being the well-oiled machine that it is, the IBC prepared for any country to by downloading appropriate national anthems. Many of those will go unu France, sensing defeat, leaves a few minutes early, declaring, "In the great traditio my people, I surrender." Thus, we won't be hearing Bobby McFerrin beat-box the Panther theme song (kind of a stretch, we know). Germany also fails to reach podium, so we'll have to shelve David Hasselhoff's German rendition of "Silent Nig Also hitting the iPod graveyard are the Spice Girls' "Wannabe" (England) and Rocky Theme Song (Italy).

The Barlympics medals are removed from their case and brought to the front of bus. Modeled after the Torino medals, which had a hole in the center, the Barlym medals also have a hole in the center, because they're CDs covered with glitter. The quite beautiful. The bronze medal is awarded first, and, according to the Commissio beer-addled calculations, it looks like Ireland takes it. U2's "Beautiful Day" blares the stereo as Burke receives his medal. Coming in second, with a first in darts, a sec in bowling and a third in the Boxer is Matt, making Quebec proud. He dons his s medal as Celine Dion belts out "My Heart Will Go On (Live From Las Vegas)," taking the gold with a first in bowling, a first in darts and a fourth in punching, is L the Canadian who turns her competition to bacon. Her eyes glisten with the faint sh mer of tears as she takes her medal while countryman Bryan Adams wails out "Ru You." Lane dances with her CCM-hockey-gear-wearing entourage as Matt looks on animosity and bloody war between their countries temporarily forgotten. Right n we're all Canadians.

But the ceremony isn't even finished before Australia lodges a formal compla He feels he should've received the bronze, and, upon further review, it appear might be right: Though dismal at bowling, he won at the Boxer, notched a secon darts (losing to Ireland, however) and a first in Golden Tee (beating Ireland—w remember, protested that). This is all a little too convoluted for the Commissione deal with right now, but let's just say the stage is set for some bad blood between A tralia and Ireland at the 2010 Barlympics, where it looks like Bob Costas is go have plenty to talk about. WRITING THE BOOK OF LOVE

Why I'm Still Married: Women Write Their Hearts Out on Love, Loss, Sex, and Who Does the Dishes*, edited by Karen Propp of Cambridge and Jean Trounstine of Tewksbury, explores the marriages of various female writers.

The stories in Why I'm Still Married are idiosyncratic; they leisurely describe the marriages of these peppery writers. Often, the pleasures and reasons behind the "Why" of the title have been developed against some grain: The writer-wife may be divorced or warily seeking solidity in contrast to her parents' marital disasters. Karen Propp describes the sizzling tensions that come with her husband's bursts of anger over ordinary tasks, and everyday differences of perceptions, but she develops an understanding of the way her response galvanizes her own strength and sense of self. Jean Trounstine, adventuresome (she teaches Shakespeare in prison) and flirtatious, hits the mortal snag of cancer and finds mellowness and comfort—a "quest for the everlasting"—in her husband's affection. Ironically, in the potentially toxic waters of an open marriage, Hannah Pine shouts in joyous italics, "I still love being married to my husband." Z.Z. Packer, archly comic, calls her guy, almost an adoring manservant with interests opposite to hers, "Mr. Packer." Liza Wieland gives us sweet yearning. And Nell Casey, child of colorful, divorced writer-parents, says of husband Jesse, "There is no way to explain the reason for why someone walks into a room and wakes up your most primal dreams."

GOOD HAIR DAY, WITHOUT SURGERY OR TRANSPLANT

Re:grow is a laser treatment for hair restoration. At 675 Tremont St., Boston (617-236-1212; www.regrow.biz). $3,800 for one year's treatment.

Like so many exciting discoveries, this one came as a happy, unintended side effect. During the test of a laser treatment for ulcers, it appeared that in addition to improved blood flow, lo! hair located near the treated areas grew thicker. And so the treatment known as "cold laser" (because it doesn't burn) began to be applied to thinning hair slouching towards baldness, and it was found to slow hair loss while also promoting some hair growth. By sitting for 20 minutes, painlessly, under a contraption that looks like a hair salon drier, first twice a week and then with diminishing frequency over 12 months, both men and women can see, on average, up to a 90 percent success rate in stopping hair loss and up to 60 percent stimulation of new growth, says Amy Grasso of re:grow. Since, when hair has become noticeably AWOL, you've already lost 25–30 percent, they ad younger people to shore up the loss early. They don't promise the "lolloping locks," as Grasso pu of a Chia Pet, but more secure maintenance and fewer of those discouraging clumps in the hairb and the shower. Treatments make some people pleasantly sleepy, others gym-jazzy—but ne everyone leaves more confident.

REVIEW

FARE WITH FLARE

The Financial District's Sakurabana serves Japanese fast and fresh with flavor.

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY ANTHONY TIEULI

My former law partner Tom took food very seriously. Not so seriously, however, that considerations of restaurant convenience and proximity were disregarded. Hence his midday eating destinations, to minimize his time "off the clock," had to be within easy walking distance of our office near Post Office Square. Since waiting time was even more wasteful than walking time—and without the cardiovascular benefits—Tom used Swiss precision to plan his local lunch forays, limited to a few acceptable venues. Sakurabana, on the corner of Broad and Milk streets, was one of his favorites. To snag a table at Sakurabana before the lunchtime rush, Tom would begin mobilizing a twosome or foursome shortly after 11:30 am for arrival at 11:45 am. Fortunately, the restaurant has almost doubled in size over the last year (having annexed the space of a former drycleaner), so that Tom-like punctuality is no longer necessary for immediate seating.

"Sakurabana" in Japanese means "cherry blossom flowers," and not surprisingly, the restaurant's kitchen shows a flare for presentation—a Japanese tradition—that goes hand in hand with the careful attention to fresh flavors and enjoyable textures. Most patrons of this first-rate eatery come for the sushi and aren't disappointed. While patrons can order à la carte from a list of elaborate sushi rolls, the most economical and rewarding approach, at least for the novice, is to choose either the sushi lunch or the sushi lunch deluxe. The former, at $11, started with a steaming bowl of miso soup, a thin but flavorful and palate-perking starter populated by small ringlets of scallion, seaweed and tiny cubes of tofu. That was followed by a tray of 13 sushi pieces, comprising two pieces each of tuna (maguro) and salmon (sake), one piece each of white fish (shiromi) and cooked shrimp (ebi), four pieces of spicy tuna roll (tekka maki) and three pieces that change daily. The sushi lunch deluxe, at $14, added to that array one piece each of yellowtail (hamachi) and smeltfish eggs (masago), as well as six pieces of a California roll. Accompanying the sushi was the customary pickled ginger (which I like to eat between bites to cleanse my palate) and powerful dollop of green wasabi horseradish.

Of these classics, to my taste the dark, lusciously rich tuna and the velvety salmon vied for top honors, but the refined, fresh and pleasantly textured yellowtail wasn't far behind. Among the maki sushi—rice with fish or vegetables, rolled up in seaweed (nori)—the California roll's avocado and imitation crab provided a rich, tasty treat for those wary of raw fish. Indeed, only the nori-wrapped sushi topped with bright orange salmon eggs might push the envelope for sushi first-timers, but a mildly fishy flavor and unique texture—the miniature spheres confront the teeth with a pleasant resiliency but explode in a little pop when bitten—merit the adventure. Spicy tuna rolls completed both sushi ensembles, their girth requiring that they be dispatched in two bites rather than one, posing a special challenge for tentative chopstick wielders.

For those who choose to venture beyond the standard sushi and sashimi sets, two superb choices are the sashimi "tuna tornado" ($11) and the spicy scallop roll sushi ($9). The former consisted of five hefty pieces of hand-rolled tuna, avocado, flying fish egg (tobiko), oba mint leaves and shredded radish (daikon) wrapped in a slice of fresh cucumber, sprinkled with sesame and bathed in a hauntingly delicious sauce. The colorful, eye-catching presentation and the interplay of the contrasting texture crunchy cucumber, buttery avocado, gr lar tobiko and silky raw tuna, with t rich, complementary flavors, proved sistible. The scallop roll, a sushi special livered warm chunks of delicately coc sea scallops in a provocatively spicy ses aioli over half a dozen well-constru sushi rolls of tobiko and avocado.

Non-sushi eaters aren't ignored Sakurabana. In addition to a numbe noodle dishes (made either with uc thick, white spaghetti-like noodles soba, more slender, dark buckwheat r dles), excellent options at lunch incl the lunch-box combinations ($11. served on lacquered bento trays. The ferent lunch-box combos all included r soup; a trio of small, moist dumplin ground shrimp and vegetables formed round bundles (shumai); a green salad w julienned carrots in a sweet-tart, ora colored ginger dressing; a small moun of steamed white rice, the staple of Ja ese cuisine for which all else is garnish; a few tidbits of fresh fruit—grapes, m and orange slices. All of these compon were arranged on the tray so as to a touching each other.

The main courses of the lunch-box cials occupied the largest compartmen the tray and included chicken, bee salmon teriyaki, breaded pork or chic cutlet (katsu), and tempura. On one re visit I ordered the tempura, deep-f morsels of vegetables, including thin sl of sweet potato, broccoli florets, sharc green pepper, sliced eggplant and two shrimp, all accompanied by an intrigui flavored broth for dipping. The light br ing and efficient flash-frying preserved textures and fresh flavors of these treats. companion chose the "tonkatsu," a d fried pork cutlet, which in Japan has gi rise to a distinctive genre of restaurants elevate this delicious preparation to honor it deserves. As in Japan, Sak bana's tonkatsu was served with shred raw white cabbage that combines a crur texture with refreshing flavor, but unfo nately, this marvelously light, healt vegetable was served in a rather mo portion compared with the generous h supplied by the typical tonkatsu hous Japan, where free second helpings of e are routine and a small crock of tangy d dressing is a standard condiment. urabana's tonkatsu did come with a tra-onal thick, sweet-tart plum sauce, best en on the side so that slices of crispy cut-can be dipped into it rather than ren-ed soggy by sauce ladled over them in kitchen. In Japan, tonkatsu is quickly p-fried so that the breading is crusty and p while the interior remains rare and v, but here (as at every other Japanese aurant in America I know) the pork was ked well done, just like Mom used to do ome—a situation not likely to change n in a country where federal law re-res menu warnings about undercooked t and fish.

While the size of the sushi lunch specials the lunch-box bento trays would satisfy but the most ravenous, Sakurabana of-an assortment of hors d'oeuvres that ld enhance any meal. Regular or spicy za ($6.25–$6.75) resembled northern nese dumplings or ravioli, with thin, der pastry containing a filling of pork vegetables, and accompanied by either ld or a spicy sauce, the latter studded h diced chilies.

Since its expansion, Sakurabana has ed a wall of faux fieldstone and hanging t fixtures in blue glass. Also new are slid-bamboo screens along the windows. The inal sushi bar, which still seats nine, and original rows of oak tables and banquettes that seat 40 have been augmented by tables that seat another 20, so that the restaurant can now accommodate 69 diners. Fortunately, this expansion doesn't seem to have overtaxed the kitchen and sushi chefs.

While the main action at Sakurabana takes place at lunchtime, as befits its Financial District location, the restaurant also serves dinner in the evening until 9:30 (and 10 on Fridays). The dinner menu covered the same territory as lunch with regard to appetizers and noodle dishes, but the entrées differ. A small selection of beers, wines and sakes complemented the food. A summertime bonus at dinner was the chance to watch a Sox game on one of the two large flat-screen TVs mounted on the walls. Also at dinner, the considerably less hectic pace than at lunch afforded extra amenities, like my gracious waitress' offering of an extra helping of raw cabbage with my tonkatsu, just like in Japan!

Because tables are so close together, businessmen or professionals meeting over lunch might well find the venue ill-suited for serious, substantive discussions—especially if confidentiality is important. On the other hand, the first-rate food and the conversation it will provoke may well provide the perfect setting for getting to know your customers, clients, or even adversaries better, and to cultivate future friendships, colleagues and referral networks. Brand Makes His Mark UpStairs on the Square's new executive chef is settling into his role.

CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Steven Brand is ready for his close-up... finally. During his first nine months as executive chef at the erable UpStairs on the Square, the rblehead native kept a low profile and used on following a doubly tough act: ently departed chefs Susan Regis and anda Lydon.

"I wanted a place to learn about myself l my cuisine," says the soft-spoken nd, who was hand-picked by UpStairs ners Mary Catherine Deibel and borah Hughes for his first executive f position. He's worked closely with h to devise a menu that's true to the Stairs tradition of mostly Italian and nch fare, yet open to new influences. t a successful synthesis: On Brand's most ent menu, UpStairs' perennial favorite ysters with pink peppercorn mignon- shares space with soft shell crab tem- a, exotically spiced in a rose-tinted h of ginger and wu-wei tea. (More col- oration here: Bartender Lolly Mason, recently left UpStairs for Meritage he Boston Harbor Hotel, suggested htea to Brand).

rand's combinations are unusual, but ae trumps novelty every time. Lemon- nder potatoes, served with poached but and green garlic, are genuinely de- ious. Under a lemongrass-steamed yel- ail snapper, a golden sauce melds the ors of seckel pear, leeks and kaffir lime a subtle, intriguing whole.

he chef's parents, who recently cele- ed a family birthday by dining in the ee Room, are proud of their son's evement. His mother, Harriet Brand, embers when the young Steven's fa- te meal was "flank steak, Caesar salad Rice-a-Roni."

g Tsai is a pitch-perfect "celebrity h." His handsome face pops up regularly TV cooking shows, in cookbooks, at inary events and even at his restaurant, e Ginger. In the "shop" section of his W site, he sells Ming Tsai–approved er- omic knives, Blue Ginger House Blend ee, a baseball cap "with [his] official roidered logo," and bamboo cutting ds. In fact, Tsai's mug graces the label TruBamboo products. A recent ad for s premium lime-and-cracked-black- per-flavored chips features a quote from Tsai: "The perfect pairing with your favorite wine." Tsai also uses his fame to promote worthy causes: Purchase a silver pendant bearing his logo ($65), and not only do all profits benefit Chefs for Humanity, but Tsai promises, "If you come into Blue Ginger wearing one, I will make you feel extra special." Hmm... did someone say free chips?

KASHMIR & INDIAN HISTORY ON NEWBURY

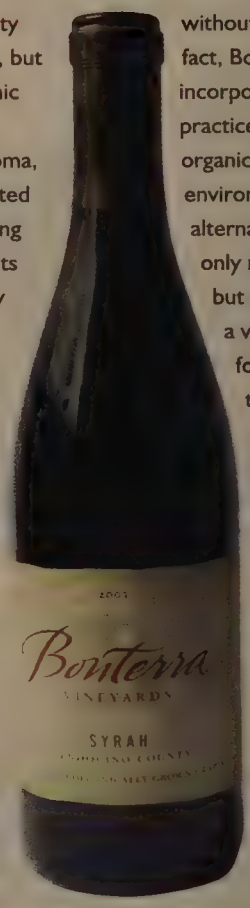
WINE

Organics on the Make

BY SANDY BLOCK, M.W.



California's Mendocino County may be a bit out of the way, but if you're interested in organic grape–growing, that's where it's at. Located just north of Napa and Sonoma, most of the agricultural region's planted vine acreage is cut off from the cooling Pacific Ocean's coastal influence, so its climate tends to be dry and relatively hot—excellent conditions for cultivating grapes without using synthetic sprays, herbicides or other treatments. But even though a sizable portion of Mendocino's grapes (somewhere between a third and a half) are grown in this manner, you're unlikely to see many labels in a wine store trumpeting this fact. Why? According to marketers, it's all about public perception: Even as more wine producers convert to organic practices out of a sense that they improve flavor and create a healthier vineyard environment, the wine-drinking public continues to associate the "o" word with bad taste experiences, along with a belief that higher production costs inflate bottle prices. Winemakers worry that if "organic" appears on the label, stores will display it in a separate section apart from other quality wines. In a sense, then, most of the organic grapes grown in Mendocino (and beyond) remain a well-kept secret. In fact, many of the vineyards that practice organic farming techniques to the letter aren't even certified as such.

But resistance to the word "organic" on a wine label will surely wither now that organic food has gone mainstream, with even giant grocery players (most notably WalMart) introducing sections specifically devoted to organic-certified produce. And price resistance appears to be diminishing, with more of the public willing to pay a premium for what they perceive as healthier, better-quality fruit and vegetables. It's only logical that this thinking would translate to wine. Gradually, and with virtually no fanfare, more and more heralded grape-growers throughout California are converting to organic farming. Mendocino County's vineyards, while not yet well-known, will likely rise to the forefront as the movement gathers steam.

One of the county's largest wineries among the 50 located there, and the leader of the organic pack since its founding in 1992, is Bonterra Vineyards. Annually producing about 200,000 cases of wine, all of it labeled "made with organically grown grapes," Bonterra isn't shy about its commitment to cultivating vines without artificial sprays or applications. I fact, Bonterra goes one step further, incorporating biodynamic farming practices—described by some as "beyon organic"—to create a healthy vineyard environment. Biodynamics is an alternative form of agriculture that not only rejects synthetic soil treatments, but also strives to attune the energy i a vineyard to larger natural forces b for instance, timing vineyard work the cycles of the moon and using series of specific organic treatments in the soil. It views th vineyard as a living, self-sustainin ecosystem.

But regardless of how it's produced, wine made from organically grown grapes still has to stand on its flavor and style. One of the most impressive I've had recently is the 2003 Bonter syrah. California syrah appears t be a well-kept secret in Boston. Even though syrah is California's fastest-growing grape in terms of new acreage planted (and demand on the West Coast is booming), bottles don't exactly fly off the shelves in Boston at anywhere near the rate as Australian wines made with the same grape. Stylistically Bonterra makes syrah in the Rhône Valley mode: earthy and complex in aroma, with edg green spice and root vegetable flavors accenting the dark, almost jammy, blackberry- like fruit. They even go so far as to blend in a bit of Viognier, as is often done in making Côt Rotie, to provide aromatic lift and to soften th otherwise unbridled power of the muscular syrah. And as in the Rhône, the vines are grow on high hillside elevations. Aged in French oak Bonterra also adds a percentage of petite sira (no relation to syrah) to deepen the color and soften the acids. This syrah is softly tannic and bit chewy, so it provides a nice complement f most red meat dishes, but it isn't too overpowering for a grilled, herb-rubbed swordfish or chicken. The price is about $20.

Should you try the Bonterra because it's made from organically grown grapes? That's one reason. But the real reason, and the driving force behind Bonterra's original decision to farm in this manner, is that it's delicious. As more people experience wines like this syrah, off-the-beaten-path Mendocin County will become known as a primary source of good grapes that happen to be organically grown. IB

Comedy: No Average Joe

Revere native Joe Rogan has come a long way since his ass-kicking days as the four-time Massachusetts state tae kwon do champ (1987–1990). In 1995, he earned a supporting role as Joe the handyman on the cult-classic sitcom News Radio, and since then he's become a reality TV staple as the host of NBC's Fear Factor. On July 7 and 8, we won't have to turn on the tube to check out his antics, as Rogan comes home to perform a weekend's worth of stand-up at the Comedy Connection in Faneuil Hall. Folks expecting to laugh along with the fun-loving dude from Fear Factor should consider themselves warned: TV Joe and comedian Joe are two very different people. Rogan's live act is raw and raunchy (if you're on the fence, you can get a taste on his DVD, Live From the Belly of the Beast, or CD, I'm Gonna be Dead Someday). It's far from your typical G-rated primetime punchlines. 245 Quincy Market, Faneuil Hall, Boston (617-248-9700). www.comedyconnectionboston.com. 8 and 10:15 pm. $29–$36. —RL

Reel Big

Music: Quite a Catch

Fans of Reel Big Fish have a real big reason to get excited this summer: The California based ska/punk rockers are in Boston on July 11 for a show at Avalon with MxPx. Ree Big Fish made their debut in 1995 with Everything Sucks, but it was 1996's Turn Off the Radio (with the hit single "Sell Out") that made them stars. Since then, the group has released four albums, the most recent being 2005's We're Not Happy 'Til You're Not Happy, which featured funky covers of Tracy Chapman's "Talkin' 'Bout a Revolution," Morrisey's "We Hate It When Our Friends Become Successful" and Social Distortion "Story of My Life." On July 18, RBF will release a concert CD/DVD aptly titled Our Liv Album Is Better Than Your Live Album, recorded at a show this March in Fullerton, Calif. Lansdowne St., Boston (617-931-2000). 7 pm. $20. —RL

ite occasional funny moments and memorable orting performances from John Michael Higgins Vincent D'Onofrio, Vince Vaughn and Jennifer ton's Chicago split-up comedy never really gets ar. Vaughn is amusing as ever, playing the sort of talking creep he does so well. The plot has her acter dumping him, yet secretly hoping he'll see error of his ways so they can get back together. the movie never convinces us that she should the jerk back. Why in the world would she? why in the world does Vaughn have such a bad ut (which miraculously vanishes for about three es)? Most frustrating is that the movie tries to do unformulaic things in its last third, but it just pull them off. Novice screenwriters Jay Lavend Jeremy Garelick couldn't figure out an enterng way to end the story unconventionally, so it runs out of steam and stops trying to be funny in ast 20 minutes. A better movie would've found a to be dramatic yet comic at the same time. (At on Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

rs ★★
's latest animated comedy—in which every single acter is an anthropomorphic automobile—runs of gas quickly. First of all, the car designs don't much variety for creating visually expressive acters. The variations among racing cars, old up trucks and other vehicles just aren't that signift. They've all been given big eyes in their windds and mouths on their front bumpers, and not h else to humanize. This hurts the chance of deping much "facial" variety, and the ordinary script n't help. This is just a familiar tale of a self-abed star who "finds" himself while stuck in a small he initially hates. This time the star is Lightning ced by Owen Wilson), a hotshot rookie racing car 's accidentally unloaded from his trailer on the to a big race. He discovers humility and commuwhile stuck in a dormant Route 66 town that was ssed for the interstate, and though the movie's t is in the right place in saluting the town's old n Street, it's more than a little odd to see an ode to enticity and quirkiness released by the kings of ormity and the ephemeral, Disney. Besides, the ution lacks the usual Pixar cleverness and laughs. e pantheon of Wilson's voicing-vehicles stories, far cry from Heat Vision and Jack, the inventive pilot in which he voiced Jack Black's motorcycle. Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

e Da Vinci Code ★★½
ne into the movie with no expectations and no wledge of Dan Brown's bestseller, beyond its r-arching premise about the hush-up of Jesus ist's marriage to Mary Magdalene and the lineage ging from that union. The tale, about an Amer- historian (Tom Hanks) and a French police offi- (Audrey Tautou) investigating a bizarre murder e Louvre and unearthing clues about the possiy of such a marriage (some clues involving nardo Da Vinci paintings), is certainly more soiticated and less silly than National Treasure, ch was basically a knock-off that attached a simirail-of-clues tale to America's founding fathers er than the Catholic Church. (Though Da Vinci s turn silly whenever Paul Bettany's psycho al- henchman turns up.) In movie terms, this is esially a Hitchcockian wrong-man-wanted thriller, merely an average one, as the two leads elude aurities who think they're involved in the original der (and others to follow) and try to uncover the h. Despite the hefty special effects that often let erts like Hanks share the screen with the historic events they're describing, and despite Hanks self (who's rather stiff here), Ron Howard's vie can be flat and plodding, and it isn't hard to its plot twists coming. California Scheming

Who Killed the Electric Car? seeks just the facts.

BY PAUL SHERMAN

At some point in the documentary Who Killed the Electric Car?, someone calls the situation a "no-brainer": A new California regulation mandated an increasing number of electric cars be sold, plenty of the state's residents wanted to cut down on smog-inducing car exhaust, and General Motors (followed by several other car manufacturers) made battery-fueled cars that those folks eagerly leased and purchased. So why did the car companies not only stop making those vehicles, but also literally destroy just about every last one of them?

That's the mystery at the heart of Chris Paine's movie, and the answers aren't pleasant. Here on the opposite side of the country, we didn't hear much about the situation in which California, its air quality getting worse and worse, enacted regulations in 1990 requiring auto manufacturers to sell an increasing share of zero-emission vehicles in the state (2 percent by 1998, 5 percent by 2003) if they wanted to market any other cars there. Although notoriously resistant to meeting changing regulations in safety and efficiency, car manufacturers actually began to market electric cars in the state, starting with General Motors' EV1, a sleek, quiet car that could go about 60 miles per charge. It seemed like a winning situation: The movie even has a clip of Tom Hanks on The Late Show with David Letterman enthusiastically telling Dave how great his EV1 is. What manufacturer wouldn't take advantage of a few million dollars' worth of free publicity like that?

The victim: General Motors' EV1 electric car

Evidently, GM wouldn't. Who Killed the Electric Car? shows the bizarre life of the car in painful detail—and it was bizarre. For instance, those who wanted to lease the car had to jump through hoops to get one (Los Angeles EV1 sales rep Chelsea Sexton and Mel Gibson talk here about how he had to essentially submit a résumé in order to be accepted into the leasing program). The EV1 TV commercials (one is included here) were dull and bookish, not the usual energetic car ads pushing fun and style. And when there was a waiting list of 4,000 to lease an EV1, according to Sexton, GM contacted those individuals to discourage them from wanting the car.

That's not all. As the movie painstakingly details, rather than forge on with its promising new products, the American Automobile Manufacturing Association (AAMA) pursued a campaign to renegotiate the zero-emissions mandate (successfully getting the zero-emission-vehicle percentages relaxed) and to smear the need for such vehicles. Tactics included claiming that the electricity used caused as much smog as regular cars (it doesn't), and planting grassroots complaints about taxpayer dollars being spent for the public charging stations (as if public money isn't being spent on highways already).

If there was any initial sincerity on the automakers' part to market electric cars, it seems as if the oil companies quickly tapped them on the shoulder and said, "What do you think you're doing? We've got a good thing going with the internal combustion engine, and we'd like to keep it that way." The movie poses a good question when it asks whether it's just a coincidence that in the same winter (1999–2000) that GM buys the Hummer brand, it also stops producing electric cars.

The final blow comes with the arrival of the Bush administration. Who Killed the Electric Car? points out another interesting coincidence in timing: The ascendance of an oil-connected president, vice president and cabinet, including Andrew Card (formerly a GM lobbyist and head of the AAMA) and Condoleezza Rice (former member of Chevron's board of directors), and the federal government's filing of a brief supporting an auto industry lawsuit against the California Air Resources Board (CARB). Meanwhile, the administration offers a lucrative tax break to those purchasing the heaviest SUVs and puts its weight behind the development of hydrogen fuel cells that, even by the estimate of a Toyota researcher interviewed in the film, are decades from being ready for use and—here's the real rub—will still require visits to oil companies' hydrogen pumps. The new head of CARB—who also just happens to be the honcho of a company promoting hydrogen fuel cells—helps to dismantle the zero-emissions mandates in 2003.

On the simplest level, this hijacking of American values defies common sense. Companies spend billions to try to turn customers into passionate believers in their products. So what did GM, Ford, Honda and Toyota, whose electric cars had won many Hanks-like fans, do? When the electric-car leases were up, they wouldn't renew them. Then they crushed and shredded the cars. They literally buried the technology that could've helped air quality and lessened our dependence on fossil fuels—and from which they could've made millions. Who Killed the Electric Car? blends outrage (Paine is a former EV1 driver) with a clean style and sense of humor (one of the highlights is the 2003 mock funeral L.A. activists held for the EV1). It's an amazing tragedy. IB pity-free determination. The movie climaxes in a showdown with Roosevelt's crosstown rival in the state finals, with Resler sticking to his vow to get every last player into the game because of the team's unflagging support for Darnellia. None of this year's big-budget spectacles will have as suspenseful a climax. (At Kendall Square.)

Lady Vengeance ★★

After Chan-Wook Park's frenetic, violent, delirious, yet somehow moving Oldboy—which turned out to be a huge DVD hit after its arthouse run—I was really looking forward to his latest. But the last entry in Park's revenge trilogy lost me at about the two-thirds mark. Up until then, Park does a good job building the story of Geum-Ja (Lee Young Ae), a beautiful murderess who, we learn through many flashbacks, didn't commit the kidnapping and murder for which she was incarcerated. In prison she cultivates a reformed, angelic appearance while befriending her cellmates. When she gets out, she drops the angelic airs and focuses on getting her ex-cellmates to help her take revenge on the former accomplice (Oldboy's Choi Min-Sik) who forced her to falsely confess to the crime that put her behind bars. But, astonishingly, the movie squanders all those flashbacks developing the relationship between the heroine and her prison pals by bringing in a whole other set of people (the parents of the accomplice's victims) when it comes time for the bloody revenge. Not only does this negate a lot of the time expended on flashbacks, but since the movie is told in Park's usual over-the-top style, the caricatured tone can't handle these parents' very real grief. Instead the movie just trivializes it. (At Kendall Square.)

Nacho Libre ★★★

Five years after graduating to lead roles, Jack Black gives us, as in School of Rock, a role that no one else but he could have nailed so amusingly and charismatically. Here, he's a lowly Mexican friar who secretly pursues his goal of becoming a wrestler. But his pursuit of ring glory as a masked "luchador" comes with the requisite hard knocks, though they're given a goofy charm by Black. Hector Jimenez is his tag-team partner and Ana de la Reguera is the beautiful nun he tentatively tries to woo. The movie's depiction of people and places south of the border isn't so flattering, even if the moviemakers want us to like those people and places. But Nacho Libre impressively sustains its gimmicky premise, even though the movie is directed by the same guy who gave us the annoying Napoleon Dynamite. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Our Brand Is Crisis ★★★

More stimulating intellectually than emotionally, Rachel Boynton's documentary shows another case where exporting American politics isn't so easy. But unlike bringing democracy to Iraq through war, this time those struggling are on the left. They're the Washington political consultants from James Carville's campaign strategy firm, who've been hired to run many campaigns in other countries. The movie follows their work in Bolivia, where ex-president Gonzalo Sanchez de Lozada hires them to handle his 2002 campaign. But things don't go so well: The candidate is unpopular; the campaign is a free-for-all, with 11 candidates and a hopelessly fragmented electorate; and the strategy of endless focus groups and "branding" their candidate as if he's a soap powder comes off as insensitive to Bolivia's needs. It's also hard to tell whether the strategists even like the guy they're pushing to Bolivian voters. Like those who'd drop bombs on a country to "democratize" it, it seems as if these Beltway strategists are exporting the worst in American politics. (At Kendall Square.)

A Prairie Home Companion ★★½

Although it's been on the air for decades, it's hard to imagine the movie adaptation of Garrison Keillor's radio show as anything but a Robert Altman (Nashville, Short Cuts) movie. The director's trademark overlapping dialogue and ability to juggle the subplots within an ensemble story are in fine display here. Taking place almost entirely within the Fitzgerald Theater, the auditorium from which the radio show has long broadcast, the loose plot finds Keillor and the rest of the show's cast performing what might be their last program, because their radio station has been bought up by a Texas-based conglomerate poised to end its production. That premise gives the movie a dramatic structure, but it's really just the sort of loose story with which Altman has long been comfortable. It flits between onstage performances and backstage conversations, between such characters as The Johnson Sisters (Meryl Streep, Lily Tomlin) and singing "trail hands" Dusty and Lefty (Woody Harrelson, John C. Reilly) and between comedy and the seemingly more serious concerns of show security chief Guy Noir (Kevin Kline), who becomes infatuated with a mysterious lady in white (Virginia Madsen). I certainly didn't mind an overlay of new characters and faces on the radio show's über-folksiness, which has scared me away for years and still creeps through at times. (At Coolidge Corner.)

The Proposition ★★★

The struggle to tame the lawless 19th-century frontier—a staple of American Westerns—is dramatically transplanted to Australia in this Nick Cave–written drama. On the law side are Englishmen such as a hard-nosed military officer (Ray Winstone) trying to "civilize" a remote area and the colonial bureaucrat (David Wenham) who tries to boss him around. On the criminal side are the Burns brothers, who've just brutally murdered an English family. The movie opens on a raid in which Winstone's men capture two of the brothers, and the titular proposition is made: If Charlie (Guy Pearce) will kill Arthur (Danny Huston), the brother who's become a sort of mountain man far from the law's reach, then the police won't hang the youngest, weakest brother (Richard Wilson). Although it'd be nice to learn what motivated the brothers' original attack, class conflict charges the entire story, whether it's between the English and the Irish or the English and the aboriginals. And the well-acted movie sustains its wonderfully grimy intensity all the way to the bloody end. (At Kendall Square.)

A Scanner Darkly ★★

Ever one for cool, thoughtful projects, Richard Linklater's film is an adaption of a short story by Philip K. Dick, who also authored the source material for Blade Runner, Total Recall and Minority Report. Scanner shares those other adaptations' blend of futurism and paranoia—with Keanu Reeves as an Orange County undercover detective who's become addicted to the drug he's supposed to be fighting against. Linklater (Slacker, Dazed and Confused, School of Rock) uses the same kind of animation-over-live-action process he did in Waking Life, and it's more effective here, as the "hero" and his fellow cops wear "scramble suits" around each other so they don't even know each other's identities (leading the hero's boss to assign him to investigate himself). But while the setting, mood and the cop's identity crisis seem right, too much of the druggie-related action (like Woody Harrelson's comic relief) seems like filler, while the important stuff (about the "anti-drug" government and the country's largest detox company being in cahoots to keep people addicted) never pushes its way to the center. Things pick up near the end, but it's too little, too late. (Ope 7 at Coolidge Corner.)

Fairy Tale

Jolie Holland channels intuitive roots for a long-awaited MFA arrival.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Jolie Holland pulls haunting tunes out of the air like a ghost whisperer with an affinity for musical instruments.

Holland made her first record, Catalpa, demo-style in her San Francisco apartment after a night of waitressing. "It was put together totally as an art project," she says. "I scraped some stuff off the bedroom floor and handed it to a friend of mine who's a filmmaker, and he put it together."

That ethereal country-blues outing found its way into the hands of Tom Waits, who nominated it for the Shortlist Music Prize, writing, "Her music is like creek-dipping at Birdland." With added kudos from Nick Cave, Catalpa was re-released on the Anti label, home to both of those artists.

"Just a sign from the universe that I was on the right track," Holland says of those endorsements. "It still flips me out. There's no way to digest that information. It'll probably be sitting in my gut for the rest of my life."

In the meantime, Holland isn't sitting still as she tries to master the studio. "The live show is really spontaneous, and we justify our presence in the rock section [of stores] when we play live," says the singer-songwriter, whose trio plays the Museum of Fine Arts' Concerts in the Courtyard series with the roots collective Ollabelle on July 12. "I haven't been able to get that sound on a record yet."

For her second studio album, Springtime Can Kill You, Holland recorded the basics live and added an audience for two songs. "My tactic was just to ditch the tracks that were sounding stiff and cut them fresh with people there," she says of the subtly jazzy effort, which fills a void between Fiona Apple and Madeleine Peyroux. "In the studio, it's just like acting. I'm transmitting my sound to people, but you have to keep reminding yourself about that."

No one would accuse Holland of over-tweaking her music. "I hear people being so precise in the studio and it sounds like constipation," she says. "It doesn't sound like human beings making something in the air together. That's what music is to me. You hear the process in the end result."

The process of making music has always been natural for Holland, 30, who began writing songs on a toy piano in her bedroom at age 6. She was upholding a family tradition: Twin great-uncles played Western swing with Bob Wills.

"There was at least a positive example, so there was a respect for culture in the family," says the self-taught Holland, while bitterly injecting, "If you had a kid who was writing songs at age six, wouldn't you get them piano lessons?" She adds, however, "I didn't even tell anybody I was writing songs, really. It was a private obsession."

Holland went on to tackle guitar, violin, accordion and cornet with equal ease. "I'm one of those weirdos that can pick up [any instrument]. The trumpet sounds like shit when most people play it, but the first time I played the cornet, I sounded good. I never squawked on a fiddle."

With her guitar-drums trio, Holland plays piano, guitar and custom-made "box" fiddle. "It's square and it almost sounds like it's distorted, like an electric guitar with a weird amp," she says. "It sounds like an old fiddle. It's really good for playing Eastern European shit. It has character."

The same might be said of Holland's musical sensibilities. She declined a 1994 acceptance to the School of the Museum of Fine Arts ("I've finally showed up!" is her response to the MFA booking 12 years later) in favor of hitting the road with a kindred pack of musicians and puppeteers.

"I was so lonely, and it was such a revelation to finally encounter freaks who were doing the same kind of shit that I was," says the Houston native, who bounced between New Orleans and Austin, and finally wandered to the West Coast. She describes that period of busking as "Getting serious and doing it without money, without ulterior motives."

Holland made her way to Vancouver, where she cofounded the alt-folk group the Be Good Tanyas, but left on the eve of their first CD release. "It wasn't fun," the singer says.

A lifelong musician, Holland can easily learn any instrument she picks up.

Her music can be described as "spooky American fairy tales," Holland says, "to pull people away from talking about bluegrass"—an association that surfaced with the Tanyas and Catalpa. "I don't know f--- about Appalachian music," says Holland, although she was weaned on Blind Willie McTell, Billie Holiday Bob Dylan, Mississippi John Hurt and Syd Barrett, and champions lesser-known artists who struggle in society.

"Josephine Baker got kicked out of her apartment in Paris and she was in her 60s," Holland says. "I'm committed, man, and I don't give a shit. If I die in the gutter, I'll die in the gutter. But I'm here to do good work." IB

Watch that first step, it's a lulu.

Visitors gather at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Lots of folks will be making the trip out to Tanglewood for opening night July 7, but music director James Levine hopes he won't be one of them. Of course he'll be there, but his last "trip" was March 1 at Symphony Hall, when he stumbled and hit the deck during the postconcert applause, resulting in rotator cuff surgery and a four-month hiatus from baton waving.

"I'm thrilled to be back, and as a result, I'm even more excited to be making music again," Levine said in a prepared statement. Those words may sound like publicist-speak, but for those who know the workaholic maestro—who thinks nothing of preceding a five-hour opera performance with an afternoon chamber recital—they have a strong ring of truth.

But does anyone besides me feel just a little nervous about the program? Levine opens the season with Schoenberg's Chamber Symphony No. 1 and Beethoven's Symphony No. 1, the exact same program he performed the night he took a header in Symphony Hall. Step lightly this time please, Mr. Maestro.

There are many highlights during the long Tanglewood summer. Among them: a superhuman eight concerts by pianist Garrick Ohlsson, exploring all 32 Beethoven sonatas; three large-scale vocal works: Schoenberg's Gurrelieder, Richard Strauss' Elektra, and Mozart's Don Giovanni; and a world premiere, written for the BSO and Yo-Yo Ma, of Osvaldo Golijov's Cello Concerto. John Harbison directs this year's Festival of Contemporary Music, and a sampling of the other soloists includes violinists Gil Shaman, Joshua Bell, Hilary Hahn and Midori, as well as pianists Peter Serkin, Richard Goode, Emanuel Ax and Yefim Bronfman. One star who won't be there is mezzo Lorraine Hunt Lieberson, who cancelled her Aug. 11 appearance due to illness.

Americans in Paris

John Singer Sargent's 1879 painting "In the Luxembourg Gardens"

Forget all that "Freedom Fries" nonsense. Politics aside, Americans have always loved Paris. At the MFA through Sept. 24, Americans in Paris, 1860–1900 shows painters like John Singer Sargent, Winslow Homer and Mary Cassatt falling under the spell of the City of Light. They lived, painted and learned there—and brought Paris home in their work.

For many American artists, "they felt if they succeeded in Paris, it was a validation of their artistic career, and then they could come home and say, 'My work is good enough,'" explains curator Erica E. Hirshler.

The roughly 100 pictures in the show include masterpieces like James McNeill Whistler's "Arrangement in Grey and Black, No. 1: Portrait of the Artist's Mother"—better known simply as "Whistler's Mother" and not seen in Boston since 1983—and Sargent's once-controversial portrait of the considerably less maternal "Madame X (Madame Pierre Gautreau)."

Paris in the years after the Civil War "was a center for art training and really established the standard for learning how to be an artist," Hirshler says. "Paris was also a center for the display of art and a sort of incubator for new styles. Of course impressionism comes out of Paris and has had a huge impact on American art." American artists who went there to learn techniques and validate their accomplishments found themselves adopting new ways of seeing. Hirshler describes the exhibition in the words of Henry James, who remarked, "When today we look for American art, we find it mainly in Paris. When we find it out of Paris, we at least find a good deal of Paris in it."

"I think people will be surprised to see how cosmopolitan in approach a lot of American artists were, even people like [Thomas] Eakins and Homer who are thought of as quintessentially American," Hirshler says. And although America and France aren't exactly best pals right now, she adds, "I think things are starting to shift around." This exhibition may help that along in some small way by reminding Americans that the French have given us a lot besides a hard time about Iraq.

Americans in Paris, 1860–1900* runs at the MFA through Sept. 24. Reserved date-and-time tickets cost $23 for adults and are available at the MFA box office, by phone (866-319-4658) or online (www.mfa.org). —Joel Brown
